To: The Honourable Pablo Rodriguez, Minister of Canadian Heritage House of Commons
Ottawa, ON K1A 0A6

July 25, 2023

RE: Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework)

Dear Minister:

We are writing to you on behalf of OpenMedia, a community-based organization that works to keep the Internet open, affordable, and surveillance-free. We work toward creating informed and participatory digital policy by engaging nearly 300,000 people across Canada in protecting our online rights.

I’m writing to you today to share with you 5,568 OpenMedia community comments regarding the government’s proposed new policy direction to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC). Further, in support of a majority of these comments, we would like to elaborate on our community’s thoughts and concerns about the strengths and drawbacks of the direction. While we appreciate certain aspects of the policy direction aimed at addressing risks to user expression and user content, we strongly believe that further improvements and clarification are necessary to alleviate undue burdens on users.

To begin, we would like to express our strong support for several parts of the draft policy direction. Specifically, we commend the inclusion of provisions such as “implement discoverability in a way that respects and, where possible, increases choice for users while also minimizing the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertaking” and “Commission would only regulate social media platforms insofar as they are acting like broadcasters and not the social media elements of their services, which include any content created and uploaded by everyday users” (paras, 33, 27). We are hopeful that this instruction will guide the CRTC towards preserving the openness and diversity of online platforms and fostering an environment that respects user choice and expression.

However, to truly solidify and enhance these commitments, we urge you to ensure that the final version of the policy direction unequivocally rules out algorithm alteration, specifically any requirements to manipulate the outcomes in all feeds, playlists, or search results on a platform. Canadians should be able to find the content they want, without having ‘CanCon’ designated media forced upon them. It is crucial that any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content remain voluntary and optional for users. By safeguarding individual choice and expression, C-11 can strike a balance between promoting Canadian content and respecting the diverse preferences of users.

We also have concerns regarding the lack of clarity in the policy direction regarding which services will be subject to regulation. We remain concerned that the ambiguity contained in the scope of the bill risks driving small and niche foreign platforms out of Canada. It is vital that the final direction explicitly and unambiguously delineates which services fall within the purview of Bill C-11 and concentrates the CRTC’s regulation on those with substantial impact to ensure that Canadians do not lose access to these valuable platforms.

Lastly, we strongly urge the inclusion of a directive to redefine CanCon in order to promote fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities resulting from the implementation of Bill C-11 must be made equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of their chosen platform.

We implore you to carefully consider the concerns and recommendations presented in this letter. It is crucial that the final policy direction strike a delicate balance between safeguarding user expression and content while supporting the growth and vitality of the Canadian digital ecosystem. While having these protections enshrined in law would have been ideal, we are confident that with appropriate guidance, the C-11 policy direction can pave the way for a sustainable, equitable and rights-respecting regulatory framework that serves the best interests of all Canadians.

Please find below the 5,568 comments from OpenMedia community members.

We trust that you will give due consideration to the feedback we have provided.

Sincerely,

[Original Signed] Ramneet Bhullar Campaigner, OpenMedia 1 (888) 441-2640 ext. 712 ramneet@openmedia.org [Original Signed] Matt Hatfield Campaigns Director, OpenMedia 1 (888) 441-2640 ext. 1 matt@openmedia.org
Appendix A: Community Comments on Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework)

July 25, 2023

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that works to keep the Internet open, affordable, and surveillance free.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to address and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[Your Name]

[Your Contact Information]
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Aaron L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Aaron B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Aaron L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Aaron N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Aaron O. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Aaron A
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Abby P
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Abdul A
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Abhay A
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Abir A
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Avis A
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   e. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   f. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   g. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   h. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   i. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Edward

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   e. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   f. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   g. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   h. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   i. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adam M.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to reluify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “subject to judicial direction, to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “a mandate not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to reluify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “subject to judicial direction, to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “a mandate not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to reluify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “subject to judicial direction, to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “a mandate not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to reluify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “subject to judicial direction, to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “a mandate not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to reluify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “subject to judicial direction, to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “a mandate not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to reluify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “subject to judicial direction, to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “a mandate not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to reluify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “subject to judicial direction, to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “a mandate not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adeline A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adam K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adithira M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adrian H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adrian K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adrian C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinue to enhance options available to consumers;”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adrian C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinue to enhance options available to consumers;”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adrian C. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. As I have noted previously, I urge you to include a direction that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Regulating social media cameras and content that cannot be regulated”;
   - “Respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction lays out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Illegal social media cameras and content that cannot be regulated”;
   - “Regulating social media cameras and content that cannot be regulated”;
   - “Respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction lays out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Illegal social media cameras and content that cannot be regulated”;
   - “Regulating social media cameras and content that cannot be regulated”;
   - “Respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction lays out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Illegal social media cameras and content that cannot be regulated”;
   - “Regulating social media cameras and content that cannot be regulated”;
   - “Respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction lays out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enforce these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enforce these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enforce these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enforce these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enforce these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - (a) the CRTC is directed to "(a) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
   - (b) and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - (a) the CRTC is directed to "(a) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
   - (b) and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - (a) the CRTC is directed to "(a) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
   - (b) and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subsidi and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of social media creators’ audience choices and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
   - Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Albert P. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subsidi and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of social media creators’ audience choices and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
   - Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alberto G. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subsidi and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of social media creators’ audience choices and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
   - Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alberto G. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subsidi and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of social media creators’ audience choices and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
   - Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adil El A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subsidi and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of social media creators’ audience choices and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
   - Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adil El A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subsidi and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of social media creators’ audience choices and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
   - Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Adil El A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subsidi and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of social media creators’ audience choices and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
   - Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alejandro D.
British Columbia

Alex G. Ontario

Alex S. Quebec

Aleksander M. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alex L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in this final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alex M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in this final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alex G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in this final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alex an Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alex M. an Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alex D. an Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alex L. an Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alex an Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alex an Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alexander C. a Quebec

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to restate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to request my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to restate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to request my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to restate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to request my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to restate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to request my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to restate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to request my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to restate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to request my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding audience choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.”
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alexandra B. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “requiring social media worlds and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alfred K. Ontario

Alia S. Alberta

Alia M. Manitoba

Alia A. Quebec

Alfa A. Alberta

Alice J. Alberta

Alice M. Ontario

Alice M. Manitoba

Alice A. Alberta

As a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet, OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alida C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

2. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alana B. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

2. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alina L. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

2. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out acrossthe-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alison

British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to explicitly enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “ensuring social media users and creators and their content are not censored”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Allen F.
Brantford, Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “ensuring social media users and creators and their content are not censored”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alvin E. Manitoba

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinued respect for audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alyson A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinued respect for audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alyson B. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinued respect for audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Amanda A. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinued respect for audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Amanda B. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinued respect for audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Amanda C. New Brunswick

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinued respect for audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Amanda D. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinued respect for audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Amanda E. Saskatchewan
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;” b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;” c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations and allows users to choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;” b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;” c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations and allows users to choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;” b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;” c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations and allows users to choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Amanda H. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alterations of broadcasting undertakings;
   - excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;".
   - I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Amos L. Ontario

Amrith K. Manitoba

Amy H. Ontario

Amy R. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alterations of broadcasting undertakings;
   - excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;".
   - I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Amr E. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to specify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Including social media creators and content that entered from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ana M. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - do that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

2. To further strengthen those commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andrea A. Ontario

Andrea B. Ontario

Andrea L. Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andrea F.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "CRTC is directed to '[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;'
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to '[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures assigned to promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the users choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy directions lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration, and listen to the voice of the people.

Andrea M.
British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respecting cultural expressions and art forms other than broadcast media...”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(b) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andrei C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respecting cultural expressions and art forms other than broadcast media...”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(b) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andrew P. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respecting cultural expressions and art forms other than broadcast media...”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(b) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andres M. British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "reserving regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onduct a detailed and objective analysis of the impact of online undertakings on audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andrew L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onduct a detailed and objective analysis of the impact of online undertakings on audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andrew F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onduct a detailed and objective analysis of the impact of online undertakings on audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andrew T. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onduct a detailed and objective analysis of the impact of online undertakings on audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andrew Z. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Andrew K. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Andrew A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Andrew A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not set across-the-board algorithms that alter expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on where services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Andrew V.
British Columbia

Andrew W.
Nova Scotia

Andrew H.
New Brunswick

Andrew N.
Quebec

Andrew K.
Ontario

Andrew J.
Saskatchewan

Andrew L.
Alberta
1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- “without social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
- “and that the CRTC is directed to `(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andrew H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to rephrase and enhance these commitments to the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- “without social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
- “and that the CRTC is directed to `(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Andrew H. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to rephrase and enhance these commitments to the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- “without social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
- “and that the CRTC is directed to `(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Angie T. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to rephrase and enhance these commitments to the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- “without social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
- “and that the CRTC is directed to `(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Angie M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to rephrase and enhance these commitments to the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- “without social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
- “and that the CRTC is directed to `(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Angela H.
New Brunswick
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to revisit and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. In particular, I urge the inclusion of a direction that the algorithms themselves as which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Angela W.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to revisit and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. In particular, I urge the inclusion of a direction that the algorithms themselves as which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Angela B. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation.”

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings should be voluntary and optional to whom like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings should be voluntary and optional to whom like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to readily and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation.”

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings should be voluntary and optional to whom like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to readily and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation.”

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings should be voluntary and optional to whom like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures asserted at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users and their creators, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Anita H. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures asserted at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users and their creators, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ann T. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures asserted at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users and their creators, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators in the changed discovery framework”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. a [the] “CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators in the changed discovery framework”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. a [the] “CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators in the changed discovery framework”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. a [the] “CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators in the changed discovery framework”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. a [the] “CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators in the changed discovery framework”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. a [the] “CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators in the changed discovery framework”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. a [the] “CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [sic] "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Anna H. Alberta

Anna Louise F. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [sic] "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Anna H. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- "Infringement detectability provisions are a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "Infringement detectability provisions are a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
- "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
- "The CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “imposing regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Anthony O.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Anthony P.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing downward compatibility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

   b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"

   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Antonio T. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Arden LeBlanc
Arden LeBlanc

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ontario
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Quebec
Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ontario
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Manitoba
Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "treating social media users and creators and their content fairly;"
   - "if the CRTC is directed to (b) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
   - "if the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be the user’s choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "treating social media users and creators and their content fairly;"
   - "if the CRTC is directed to (b) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
   - "if the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be the user’s choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Annex A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Annex B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Annex C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Annex D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Annex E. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Annex F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Arthur M. Nova Scotia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should not involve altering algorithms, as this would violate audience choice and increase the options available online.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ashley A.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should not involve altering algorithms, as this would violate audience choice and increase the options available online.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ashley S.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should not involve altering algorithms, as this would violate audience choice and increase the options available online.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ashley G.
Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should not involve altering algorithms, as this would violate audience choice and increase the options available online.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ashley A.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should not involve altering algorithms, as this would violate audience choice and increase the options available online.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ashley A.
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should not involve altering algorithms, as this would violate audience choice and increase the options available online.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ashley G.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should not involve altering algorithms, as this would violate audience choice and increase the options available online.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ashley S.
British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are treated fairly";
   - "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the users decide whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Avin Y. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the users decide whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Avin. Y. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the users decide whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”
   - “a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures asserted to promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”
   - “a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures asserted to promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”
   - “a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures asserted to promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”
   - “a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures asserted to promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”
   - “a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures asserted to promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”
   - “a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures asserted to promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Barbara S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Barb T. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Barbara P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Barbara H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Barbara S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Barbara H. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   e. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction not place the onus on any online undertakings to alter algorithms. Any measure aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Barry P. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Barry P. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out cross-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Barton O. Alberta

Becky K.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “ensuring social media users and creators and their content are not regulated”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction also states that CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "Implementing discoverability provisions is a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   "Reducing social media harms and creates their content first regulation;"
   "D. and that the CRTC is directed to: (a) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
   and will provide multiple opportunities for abuse, which would ultimately undermine the public's faith in its institutions (and for good reason).

2. Secondly, I urge the CRTC to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available" and to ensure that online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "Implementing discoverability provisions is a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   "Reducing social media harms and creates their content first regulation;"
   "D. and that the CRTC is directed to: (a) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
   and will provide multiple opportunities for abuse, which would ultimately undermine the public's faith in its institutions (and for good reason).

2. Secondly, I urge the CRTC to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available" and to ensure that online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "Implementing discoverability provisions is a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   "Reducing social media harms and creates their content first regulation;"
   "D. and that the CRTC is directed to: (a) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
   and will provide multiple opportunities for abuse, which would ultimately undermine the public's faith in its institutions (and for good reason).

2. Secondly, I urge the CRTC to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available" and to ensure that online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media views and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. And that the CRTC is directed to [x] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favor of the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media views and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. And that the CRTC is directed to [x] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favor of the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned Canadian, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media views and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. And that the CRTC is directed to [x] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favor of the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media views and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. And that the CRTC is directed to [x] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favor of the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media views and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. And that the CRTC is directed to [x] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favor of the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media views and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. And that the CRTC is directed to [x] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favor of the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bernard B. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available in the final version.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Beth L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available in the final version.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Betty S. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available in the final version.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Betty D. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “That the CRTC is directed to [i] exempt analog services and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. especially "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. especially "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. especially "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to dilate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creations and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to ")(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available)."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

Bill D. Yukon

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online creators, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Billy J. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online creators, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bill W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online creators, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bill Y. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online creators, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantively and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not exclude cross-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantively and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not exclude cross-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantively and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not exclude cross-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantively and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not exclude cross-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantively and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not exclude cross-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantively and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not exclude cross-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantively and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not exclude cross-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

e. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

e. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

e. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

e. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alterable algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I would like to express my strong support for the following:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alterable algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “[the] CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alterable algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”; and
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t take these as services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brad P. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”; and
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t take these as services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brad P. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”; and
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t take these as services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brad A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”; and
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t take these as services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brad A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”; and
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t take these as services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. excluding social media users and creators from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned Canadian, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respecting social media users and creators and their content when implementing "online undertakings are subject to regulations of social media creators"; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]haracter choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not make changes to social media and online algorithms that would limit access to their content.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. However, I am interested in understanding how these commitments will be implemented.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respecting social media users and creators and their content when implementing “online undertakings are subject to regulations of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]haracter choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not make changes to social media and online algorithms that would limit access to their content.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brayden S.

Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brenda J. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brenda G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brenda H. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Link S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Branka C.

Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brenda S. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brenda A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brenda G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brenda J. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   e. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; and
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to re-express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. requiring social media users and creators and their content to be subject to regulations of broadcasting undertakings;
   c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bryan A.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework) Whi...
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brian A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brian M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brian M. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction not cut across-the-board algorithmic restrictions entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2460
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Brian L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Brian S. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Brian H. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Brian L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Brian S. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Brian H. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Brian H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC ( Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework) While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to explicitly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users who desire and, any CRTC-directed changes to free online algorithms work should let the user whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brian B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC ( Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework) While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to explicitly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users who desire and, any CRTC-directed changes to free online algorithms work should let the user whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brian G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC ( Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework) While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to explicitly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users who desire and, any CRTC-directed changes to free online algorithms work should let the user whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for greater algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
   e. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brigitte C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brigitte M. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brigitte N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brigitte L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brigitte K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brigitte O. Saskatchewan

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brittney A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings.”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bruce A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bruce N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bruce G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bruce A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Brittney A. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings.”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bruce A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on social media creators";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bruce W. Quebec
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Bryan K. Manitoba
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "(iii) CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media communications and creation and their content in regulation";
   c. "including online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from any mandatory content filters”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[c] all respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

    To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction fall out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

    3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

    4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

    I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Caitlin
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[c] all respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

    To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction fall out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

    3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

    4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

    I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Caitlin
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[c] all respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

    To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction fall out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

    3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

    4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

    I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Caitlin
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[c] all respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

    To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction fall out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

    3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

    4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

    I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Caitlin
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[c] all respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

    To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction fall out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

    3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

    4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

    I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Caitlin
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[c] all respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

    To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction fall out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

    3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

    4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

    I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Caitlin
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[c] all respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

    To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction fall out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

    3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

    4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

    I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. I want my sonic prime content excluded from the CRTC’s control over Netflix and YouTube.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Encouraging social media users and creators and their content to be listed on search engines";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cameron Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Encouraging social media users and creators and their content to be listed on search engines";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cameron R.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Encouraging social media users and creators and their content to be listed on search engines";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cameron P. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Encouraging social media users and creators and their content to be listed on search engines";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cameron C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Encouraging social media users and creators and their content to be listed on search engines";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cameron Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to see the policy direction address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excising excessive regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Candice M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to see the policy direction address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excising excessive regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Carla D. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to see the policy direction address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excising excessive regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Carl M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to see the policy direction address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excising excessive regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Carey K. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to see the policy direction address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excising excessive regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cara N. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to see the policy direction address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excising excessive regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cara S. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to see the policy direction address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excising excessive regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cara S. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to see the policy direction address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excising excessive regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cara A. Saskatchewan

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed toward “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Carol C.
British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Carol A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Carolena T.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Columbia British Columbia

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Columbia British Columbia

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Columbia British Columbia

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cara S.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cara S.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cara S.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cara S.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enforce these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Caroll M.
Saskatchewan

Caroll A.
Ontario

Caroll B.
Ontario

Caroll C.
Ontario

Caroll D.
Ontario

Caroll E.
Saskatchewan

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to require my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction raises the risks of the algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be left to the operator, and not to the regulator.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Catherine M. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in particular the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. The policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cathy S.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in particular the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. The policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cecilia M.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in particular the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. The policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cecile B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in particular the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. The policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in particular the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. The policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in particular the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. The policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Alberta
Cédric M. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft position paper, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   c. the [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”,
   e. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   g. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   h. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   i. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   j. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   k. implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   l. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework) while I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "preserving social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on social media users or online access services";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directionrule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to be.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choices and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Charles A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so that we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to创造.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am wishing you to validate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cheryl A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directives’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to fully and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction should set out across-the-board algorithmic attention. Any measures applied at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I am concerned that the policy directives lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Cheryl W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directives’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to fully and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction should set out across-the-board algorithmic attention. Any measures applied at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I am concerned that the policy directives lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Cheryl M. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

This bill should never have been implemented. There is absolutely no reason the government should be allowed to control what we as free citizens should be free to say.

The media “takes” what is going on, as if they may somehow be responsible for it.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cheryl L. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directives’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to fully and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction should set out across-the-board algorithmic attention. Any measures applied at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I am concerned that the policy directives lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Cheryl L. British Columbia

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cheryl B. Ontario

This bill should never have been implemented. There is absolutely no reason the government should be allowed to control what we as free citizens should be free to say.

The media “takes” what is going on, as if they may somehow be responsible for it.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cheryl L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directives’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to fully and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction should set out across-the-board algorithmic attention. Any measures applied at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I am concerned that the policy directives lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Cheryl L. British Columbia

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cheryl S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directives’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to fully and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction should set out across-the-board algorithmic attention. Any measures applied at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I am concerned that the policy directives lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Cheryl L. Ontario

This bill should never have been implemented. There is absolutely no reason the government should be allowed to control what we as free citizens should be free to say.

The media “takes” what is going on, as if they may somehow be responsible for it.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available1.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Chris A, Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directive’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directive:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directive rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directive lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Chris A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directive’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directive:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directive rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directive lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Chris B. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directive’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directive:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directive rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directive lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Chris C. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directive’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directive:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directive rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directive lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Chris D. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directive’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directive:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directive rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy directive lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting social media users and creates and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Imposing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction also act on the following points:
   a. "Including discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Imposing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "Respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators in their current format regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further enhance these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuance Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, I am seeing gaps to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction evolve across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction evolve across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Christine A. Saskatchewan

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Christine M. Quebec

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Christine L. Alberta

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Christine D. British Columbia

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Christine N. British Columbia

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Christine L. Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Christine C. Quebec

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cristopher S. Manitoba

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Christopher P.
Ontario

Christopher E. Ontario

Christopher R. Ontario

Christopher I. Quebec

Christopher B. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Christopher A.
New Brunswick

Christopher A.
Quebec

Christopher A.
Quebec

Christopher A.
Ontario

Christopher A.
Ontario

Christopher A.
Ontario

Christopher A.
Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of non-broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of non-broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and thus content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Christopher A.
Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Christopher M.
Ontario
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Offering social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Offering social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Offering social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Appropriately derogating determinations make in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;" and
   b. "Taking social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;" and
   e. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cindy B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Appropriately derogating determinations make in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;" and
   b. "Taking social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;" and
   e. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cindy M. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction not set across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to whom like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Government should not have their hands in public information free speech ! To much over reach by this government taking away freedom gives concern. Time we abolish government and look at something less corrupt.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Clark W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Claude B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Clara M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Clare H. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Claudette C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Claudia F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Claudia T.
British Columbia

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Clifford W.
Nova Scotia

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Clifford D.
Ontario

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

CLIFFORD H. Manitoba

Cody M. Manitoba

Clinton P. Manitoba

Clinton W. Manitoba

Clint O. Ontario

British

Labrador

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction魄ue out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction魄ue out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction魄ue out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings are subject to the same protections as broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Colin W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings are subject to the same protections as broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Colin W. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Colin A.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Colleen C.
Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a Canadian citizen, I submit my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Connie A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Corey W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Byron P. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Byron P. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Byron P. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Connie A. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   e. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Corine L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Corin A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

2. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Corin H. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

2. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Corry A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

2. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to "[c]onfirm that audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "[c]onfirm that audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Craig M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to "[c]onfirm that audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "[c]onfirm that audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Craig C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to "[c]onfirm that audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "[c]onfirm that audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
First, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

1. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction recognizes the need for consumer choice in the rules governing the deployment of online undertakings.

2. I would strongly support the following guidance in the policy direction:

3. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

Craig S. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to further clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Curtis M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to further clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Curtis M. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be optional whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Cynthia J. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be optional whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

cyril L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be optional whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

D. M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be optional whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

D. N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be optional whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

D. N. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be optional whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

D. Piet L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be optional whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes any need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - That the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daisy M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes any need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - That the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daisy M. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes any need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - That the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daisy M. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dale A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dale A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daniel B. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daniel D. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daniel E. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dane H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-evaluate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Respecting social media uses and creators and their carried from regulation”;
   - “Require that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Respecting social media uses and creators and their carried from regulation”;
   - “Require that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daniel J. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daniel H. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daniel M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daniel F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daniel C. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Daniel M.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subtly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reexpress my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subtly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reexpress my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subtly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reexpress my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subtly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reexpress my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subtly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reexpress my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subtly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reexpress my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration and I look forward to your time in reading my comments.

Daniele P.
Ontario

Danne E.
Quebec

Danielle J.
Alberta

Daniele A.
Ontario

Daniele J.
Alberta

Daniele F.
Ontario

Danny L.
Quebec

Danny N.
Ontario

Danny T.
Ontario
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
- Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
- That the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
- And that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
- To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Danny
Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darcy R. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darcy W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darcy A. Prince Edward Island

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darcy B. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Davina H. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darin T. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darin A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing algorithmic transparency is in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respect the content creators’ and audiences’ lawful rights to access and remove content from online undertakings”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to direct that the online undertakings include in their platform a content management system (CMS) that is not more burdensome than necessary to the online undertakings industry”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to direct that online undertakings respect the audience’s choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction includes the following commitments to online algorithms.
   a. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   b. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
   c. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darlene A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing algorithmic transparency is in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respect the content creators’ and audiences’ lawful rights to access and remove content from online undertakings”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to direct that online undertakings include in their platform a content management system (CMS) that is not more burdensome than necessary to the online undertakings industry”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to direct that online undertakings respect the audience’s choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction includes the following commitments to online algorithms.
   a. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   b. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
   c. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darlene M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing algorithmic transparency is in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respect the content creators’ and audiences’ lawful rights to access and remove content from online undertakings”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to direct that online undertakings include in their platform a content management system (CMS) that is not more burdensome than necessary to the online undertakings industry”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to direct that online undertakings respect the audience’s choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction includes the following commitments to online algorithms.
   a. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   b. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
   c. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darlene C. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing algorithmic transparency is in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respect the content creators’ and audiences’ lawful rights to access and remove content from online undertakings”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to direct that online undertakings include in their platform a content management system (CMS) that is not more burdensome than necessary to the online undertakings industry”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to direct that online undertakings respect the audience’s choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction includes the following commitments to online algorithms.
   a. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   b. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
   c. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darlene B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing algorithmic transparency is in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respect the content creators’ and audiences’ lawful rights to access and remove content from online undertakings”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to direct that online undertakings include in their platform a content management system (CMS) that is not more burdensome than necessary to the online undertakings industry”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to direct that online undertakings respect the audience’s choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction includes the following commitments to online algorithms.
   a. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   b. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
   c. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darren P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darryl M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darren M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darryl C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darryl T. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. Secondly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Darryn
Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dave
Quebec

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dave A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dave A. British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dave B. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dave C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dave D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dave E. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dave F. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dave G. British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “Empowering discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “Reducing social media views and creators’ and their content from regulation”;

c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to free online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “regulating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring television undertakings to respect audience choice and to increase the options available”;
   - “requiring radio undertakings to respect audience choice and to increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to notify and endorse these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to notify and endorse these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David M. Quebec

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction recognize the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David G. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David F. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   c. “Respecting audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   c. “Respecting audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
DAVID M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reaffirm my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Ensuring social media users and creators have their content discoverable;"
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available for;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David G. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reaffirm my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Ensuring social media users and creators have their content discoverable;"
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available for;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David K. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reaffirm my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Ensuring social media users and creators have their content discoverable;"
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available for;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy directions lack clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider the possibilities of the open Internet.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't face these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David A.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider the possibilities of the open Internet.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t face these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David B.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider the possibilities of the open Internet.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t face these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David C.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider the possibilities of the open Internet.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t face these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David D.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider the possibilities of the open Internet.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t face these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David E.
Chilling Effect on Innovation and Creativity:
ability to freely express themselves. By expanding the government's power, the bill undermines the principles of democracy, where a diverse range of opinions and perspectives should be protected and fostered.

Bill C-11 raises significant constitutional concerns, particularly regarding the protection of freedom of expression and privacy. Section 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees freedom of thought, belief, opinion, and expression, yet the bill introduces mechanisms that could limit these rights online. The broad scope of censorship powers bestowed upon the government under this legislation raises serious questions about its compliance with constitutional principles.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David S.
Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- (a) (i) the CRTC is directed to ("a") implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
- (b) (i) the CRTC is directed to ("b") exclude social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
- (c) (i) the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
- (d) and that the CRTC is directed to ("c") respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction remains unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

David A.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- (a) (i) the CRTC is directed to ("a") implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
- (b) (i) the CRTC is directed to ("b") exclude social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
- (c) (i) the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
- (d) and that the CRTC is directed to ("c") respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction remains unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

David M.
Yukon

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- (a) (i) the CRTC is directed to ("a") implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
- (b) (i) the CRTC is directed to ("b") exclude social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
- (c) (i) the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
- (d) and that the CRTC is directed to ("c") respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction remains unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

David L.
Newfoundland and Labrador

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- (a) (i) the CRTC is directed to ("a") implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
- (b) (i) the CRTC is directed to ("b") exclude social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
- (c) (i) the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
- (d) and that the CRTC is directed to ("c") respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction remains unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

David F.
Novo Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- (a) (i) the CRTC is directed to ("a") implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
- (b) (i) the CRTC is directed to ("b") exclude social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
- (c) (i) the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
- (d) and that the CRTC is directed to ("c") respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction remains unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention widening. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David T. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention widening. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David G. Nova Scotia
David S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reflect all the above provisions. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David J. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reflect all the above provisions. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reflect all the above provisions. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “imposing regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creation”;

c. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

d. “be voluntary and optional to online users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.”

I would strongly urge the inclusion of a mandate that creates the same opportunity for online creators. Any measure aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I am concerned that the CRTC lacks clarity on which online services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I will take your feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "increasing opportunities for social media creators to benefit from content distribution within or between undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David H. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

David A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media creators and their content and their right to be heard”;
   c. “The CRTC may direct to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to notify you that I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   e. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   f. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   g. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   h. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to notify you that I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   e. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   f. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   g. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   h. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to notify you that I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   e. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   f. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   g. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   h. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to notify you that I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   e. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   f. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   g. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   h. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to notify you that I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   e. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   f. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   g. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   h. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Debbie A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Debbie B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Debbie G.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Debbie P. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. First, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Debbie A.
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. First, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Deborah B.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. First, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Deborah C.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. First, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Deborah D.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. First, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, whether they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to establish and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Canadians have had enough, more than enough.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to establish and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Denis A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - all that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Denise B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - all that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Denise F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - all that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Denis T. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - all that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Denis D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - all that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings."
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation."
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators."
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content in regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that respects the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   e. “Including social media users and creators and their content in regulation”;
   f. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   g. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that respects the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. Secondly, I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dennis C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dennis D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Denise K. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Derek O. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "enabling social media views and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Derek A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "enabling social media views and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Derek B. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to publicly and formally address these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dhannie T. Alberta

Diana T. Ontario

Dian B. a R. Columbia

Dhanya L. British Columbia

Dharmendr D. Northwest Territories and Nunavut

Diana W. British Columbia

Diana W. Nova Scotia

Diana T. Ontario

Diana T. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - Increasing the scope of online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - That the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - And that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule OUT across-the-board algorithm alteration ENTIRELY. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Diana A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirety. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dianne O.  British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dillan G. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dietrich B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dietmar R. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says something about the potential for the CRTC to direct changes to online algorithms. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the CRTC lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they are located.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dale H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says something about the potential for the CRTC to direct changes to online algorithms. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they are located.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dane R. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says something about the potential for the CRTC to direct changes to online algorithms. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they are located.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dolly T. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says something about the potential for the CRTC to direct changes to online algorithms. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they are located.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Doris K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says something about the potential for the CRTC to direct changes to online algorithms. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they are located.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dorothy A. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says something about the potential for the CRTC to direct changes to online algorithms. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they are located.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Doreen A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content be voluntary and optional to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says something about the potential for the CRTC to direct changes to online algorithms. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they are located.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”, and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I consider that the final versions of the policy direction must ensure that CRTC can apply its regulatory requirements in respect of programs of social media creators, and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to make it clear and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. Further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and express, in it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction must set out across-the-board alternatives entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. Further, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and roles driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and roles driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and roles driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and roles driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and roles driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate the importance of safeguarding the possibilities of the open Internet.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

DONALD

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate the importance of safeguarding the possibilities of the open Internet.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

DONALD

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate the importance of safeguarding the possibilities of the open Internet.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

DONALD

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate the importance of safeguarding the possibilities of the open Internet.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

DONALD

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate the importance of safeguarding the possibilities of the open Internet.
2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

DONALD
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - Ensuring that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Donna A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - Ensuring that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Donna A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - Ensuring that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Donna A. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "resulting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[ Signature ]

Donna M.
B.C.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "resulting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[ Signature ]

Donna O.
B.C.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dorothy A.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dorothy E.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dorothy J.
Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Doug A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Doug B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Doug C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Doug D. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Doug E. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Doug F. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to reevaluate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to doubly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “(i) CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
Having lived in this beautiful, free country for the past 19 years (10 as Canadian citizens) we feel duty bound to submit some comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are regulated”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be chosen whether or not we use them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services. Only hate, dynasty and falsehood should be targeted without a project.

4. Lastly, we urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are regulated”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be chosen whether or not we use them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services. Only hate, dynasty and falsehood should be targeted without a project.

4. Lastly, we urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, we are submitting our comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).

1. Firstly, we would like to express our strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are regulated”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be chosen whether or not we use them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services. Only hate, dynasty and falsehood should be targeted without a project.

4. Lastly, we urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, we are submitting our comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are regulated”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be chosen whether or not we use them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services. Only hate, dynasty and falsehood should be targeted without a project.

4. Lastly, we urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, we are submitting our comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are regulated”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be chosen whether or not we use them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services. Only hate, dynasty and falsehood should be targeted without a project.

4. Lastly, we urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Drew S. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Regulating degradability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regularization);
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Drew M. Labrador

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Regulating degradability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regularization);
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Dustin T. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Regulating degradability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regularization);
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Dustin M. Labrador

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Regulating degradability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regularization);
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
Dwayne K. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dylan B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dwayne W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dwayne A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dwayne W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dylan B. Island

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dylan A. Island

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   e. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   g. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   h. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   i. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   j. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Earl A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Earl B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Earl C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Earl D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Earl L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Earl A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I, Ed B. Alberta, submit the following comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
- c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
- d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and voluntarily, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
- c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
- d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and voluntarily, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
- c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
- d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and voluntarily, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for alteralgorithms of broadcasting undertakings’;

b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation’;

c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments to the fullest.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media uses and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Edward J. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments to the fullest.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media uses and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Edward J. Alberta

The above letter is way too polite ;  The bloody law should never have seen the light of day .   The Black Face /NDP government has their mind set and nothing we say means anything to them .  This is a power grab plain & simple .

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments to the fullest.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media uses and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Edward J. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I know as decision makers your task is difficult so please take the advice of well meaning Canadians like myself.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "increasing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sincerely,

[Name]

[Location]
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing derogatory provisions is a way that maximizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Elizabeth L.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Elizabeth U. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Elizabeth B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Elizabeth H. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Elizabeth B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Elizabeth U. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic changes. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic changes. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic changes. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic changes. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic changes. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Emily A.
Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity and specification on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Emily Y. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that recognizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;" (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am urging you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “introducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction have an across-the-board algorithm allocation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Eric P.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “introducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction have an across-the-board algorithm allocation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Eric P.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “introducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction have an across-the-board algorithm allocation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Eric P.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am calling you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “researching discoverability provisions and any regulations that may be necessary to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “researching discoverability provisions and any regulations that may be necessary to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I remain concerned that this opportunity to solidify and enhance these commitments is being lost in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; and
   - "requiring social media and content creators and their content from regulation".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-address and enhance these commitments to the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Empowering disempowered communities in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Involving local media and creators in their content creation";
   - "Involving social media users and creators and their content creation";
   - "Involving social media users and creators in their content creation in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "Involving social media users and creators in their content creation in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "Involving social media users and creators in their content creation in respect of programs of social media creators";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not create the need to alter algorithms to ensure the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Involving local media and creators in their content creation in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "Involving social media users and creators in their content creation in respect of programs of social media creators";

4. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not create the need to alter algorithms to ensure the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

5. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not create the need to alter algorithms to ensure the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

6. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Erin L. Toronto
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “considering the impact of discoverability requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “considering the impact of discoverability requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertake...
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Ethan a. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Ethan b. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Ethan c. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Ethan d. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Ethan e. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Eugene M. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Eva A. D. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Eva A. Saskatchewan

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "expanding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
   - I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reiterates that online undertakings are free of cross-border ideological interventions. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-imposed changes to online algorithms should be optional and available to users.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Evan Rodwell
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinue to work with industry to foster greater audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinue to work with industry to foster greater audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like you to ensure my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states: “any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so as not to lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

Thank you for taking my comments into consideration.

Evelyn T., Quebec

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction takes account of the broadcasting or web-based undertakings’ best efforts to respect individual choice and expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[Signature]

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to study and enhance these commitments in the final version.

Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction takes account of the broadcasting or web-based undertakings’ best efforts to respect individual choice and expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[Signature]

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to study and enhance these commitments in the final version.

Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction takes account of the broadcasting or web-based undertakings’ best efforts to respect individual choice and expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[Signature]

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to study and enhance these commitments in the final version.

Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction takes account of the broadcasting or web-based undertakings’ best efforts to respect individual choice and expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[Signature]

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to study and enhance these commitments in the final version.

Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction takes account of the broadcasting or web-based undertakings’ best efforts to respect individual choice and expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[Signature]

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to study and enhance these commitments in the final version.

Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction takes account of the broadcasting or web-based undertakings’ best efforts to respect individual choice and expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[Signature]
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ferhat A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Farrell L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Fauconnier D. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Felix W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Felix G. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

FELIX A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to reiterate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reads out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to reiterate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reads out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   e. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing accessibility provisions in a way that maximizes the need for user algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online algorithms will be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be initiated by me, whether or not I choose to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Florence P. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing accessibility provisions in a way that maximizes the need for user algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online algorithms will be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be initiated by me, whether or not I choose to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Florin M. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing accessibility provisions in a way that maximizes the need for user algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online algorithms will be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be initiated by me, whether or not I choose to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Florent B. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing accessibility provisions in a way that maximizes the need for user algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online algorithms will be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be initiated by me, whether or not I choose to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Flora M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing accessibility provisions in a way that maximizes the need for user algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online algorithms will be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be initiated by me, whether or not I choose to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Francis A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Francis M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Francine B. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Francine G. Northwest Territories and Nunavut

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Francine J. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "seeking social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction not cut across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content within the scope of broadcasting undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Frank M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content within the scope of broadcasting undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Frank T. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “not imposing any mandatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   - If CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available, so we don't lose access to these services.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made after clear consultation with Canadians on how such changes will be conducted and evaluated.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[Signature]
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directive rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. That the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gabriel Quebec

As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. That the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing decoupling provisions in a way that minimizes fees to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reiterates the standpoint that any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gabbie A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing decoupling provisions in a way that minimizes fees to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reiterates the standpoint that any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Galah A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing decoupling provisions in a way that minimizes fees to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reiterates the standpoint that any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Galil F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing decoupling provisions in a way that minimizes fees to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reiterates the standpoint that any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Galil F. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing decoupling provisions in a way that minimizes fees to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reiterates the standpoint that any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gareth F. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing decoupling provisions in a way that minimizes fees to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reiterates the standpoint that any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Unifying social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Gareth A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sufficiently and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Unifying social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Garrick O. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sufficiently and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Unifying social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Garry B. Newfoundland and Labrador

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sufficiently and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Unifying social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Garry F. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sufficiently and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Unifying social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Garth A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sufficiently and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Unifying social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to bolster and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the choice of users.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gary C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gary T. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gary A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gary A. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I'm submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gary R. H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I'm submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gary and Liz S. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I'm submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Geoff W. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I'm submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out cross-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Geoff P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out cross-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Geoffrey J. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out cross-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Geoffrey M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out cross-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Reducing social media user and creator content and their related feed from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Geordie N. Alberta
George G. Ontario
George S. Quebec
George B. Quebec
George M. Nova Scotia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

George A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

George B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

George C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

George D. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favour of the final version of the policy direction not to alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures proposed to promote Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favour of the final version of the policy direction not to alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures proposed to promote Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favour of the final version of the policy direction not to alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures proposed to promote Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favour of the final version of the policy direction not to alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures proposed to promote Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favour of the final version of the policy direction not to alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures proposed to promote Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to codify and enhance these commitments in the final version:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in favour of the final version of the policy direction not to alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures proposed to promote Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to appeal to like-minded creators and the CRTC should be directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of algorithms of broadcasting undertakings.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction fails to clarify in what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whether they choose to create.
Gerda S. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gerry C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Germaine V.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gerrit B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gerry L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gerry R. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gerry C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to seriously and honestly embrace these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gerry L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to seriously and honestly embrace these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gerry L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to seriously and honestly embrace these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gerry L. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding individual (non-corporate) social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gilbert D. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gil R. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding individual (non-corporate) social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to add clarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Glen S.
Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to reflect and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Glenda J. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for online algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Glen W. Alberta

Gloria K. Alberta

Gloria S. Ontario

Glo M. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I am a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gloria G.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gopal H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Goran J. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. The CRTC is directed to (a) "implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. and the CRTC is directed to (b) "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. imposing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. imposing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   c. imposing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Grace K. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board changes to online algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Grace D. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board changes to online algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gracie Y. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board changes to online algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gracie K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board changes to online algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gracie C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board changes to online algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Thank you very much.

Graham W. Jordan, Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board changes to online algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Graham H. Jordan, Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board changes to online algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content creation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board alterations to algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Graham B.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to reiterate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media content and creators and their created content";
   - that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Greg A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media content and creators and their created content";
   - that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Greg B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media content and creators and their created content";
   - that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Greg D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media content and creators and their created content";
   - that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Greg A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media content and creators and their created content";
   - that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Greg N. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media content and creators and their created content";
   - that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Greg N. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media content and creators and their created content";
   - that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Greg S. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media content and creators and their created content";
   - that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Greg B. Ontario

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. [the] “CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”
   b. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction set aside across-the-board algorithmic advertisement entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration, and make the appropriate changes to protect the people of Canada from the government itself and the monopsony corporations.

Greg H. British Columbia

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Respecting social media users’ choices and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction set aside across-the-board algorithmic advertisement entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration, and make the appropriate changes to protect the people of Canada from the government itself and the monopsony corporations.

Greg T. Ontario

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Respecting social media users’ choices and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction set aside across-the-board algorithmic advertisement entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration, and make the appropriate changes to protect the people of Canada from the government itself and the monopsony corporations.

Greg Y. Ontario

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Respecting social media users’ choices and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction set aside across-the-board algorithmic advertisement entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration, and make the appropriate changes to protect the people of Canada from the government itself and the monopsony corporations.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gregory M. Alberta
OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gregory D. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gregory F. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gregory P. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guillaume C. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guillaume D. Quebec

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guillaume M. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gurinder F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Gunar R. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guillaume T. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guilaine P. Quebec

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guy H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guy H. British Columbia

The public needs the right to have information on all aspects of government (geopolitical agendas etc.) without the right to hear lies or what is reported to keep risk content out of air in Canada. This is a very well informed public that has a right to know how the laws are deciding what we are able to hear on our computers.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guy H. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guy H. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guy M. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

We already have laws regulating what is legal or illegal.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Guy W. Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online creators like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made in consultation with us, the creators.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions so that online undertakings do not impose mandatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Hamid A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions so that online undertakings do not impose mandatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Harsh B.
Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions so that online undertakings do not impose mandatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Hannah H.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions so that online undertakings do not impose mandatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Hannah K.
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions so that online undertakings do not impose mandatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Haroon R.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions so that online undertakings do not impose mandatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Hana Y.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions so that online undertakings do not impose mandatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Hans G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Harley O. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Harley O. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to study and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes meaningful access to programs of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Harold A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to study and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes meaningful access to programs of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Harold B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to study and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes meaningful access to programs of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Harold C. British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Harry S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Harry B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Harrold P. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Hart L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Harvey T. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to stabilize and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the finalversion of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Hayden M.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to stabilize and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the finalversion of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Hayden M.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to stabilize and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the finalversion of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

Hayden M.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to stabilize and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the finalversion of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Hayden M.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to stabilize and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the finalversion of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice, not the state's.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and is not specifically aimed at reducing the risks posed to online creators. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice, not the state's.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and is not specifically aimed at reducing the risks posed to online creators. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice, not the state's.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and is not specifically aimed at reducing the risks posed to online creators. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the user's choice, not the state's.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and is not specifically aimed at reducing the risks posed to online creators. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Reducing social media views and create and their current form of regulation";
   c. "Ensure social media views and creators and their current form of regulation";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Helena W.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Helena L.
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Helga M.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Heidi K.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Heidi E.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Heidi A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the foreseeable risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a.实施可发现性规定的方式，以实现对算法错误的最小影响; (ii) CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board alteration of algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and thus there is a risk of eventually driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we do not lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the foreseeable risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. that (i) CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board alteration of algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content on various online platforms should be optional and completely voluntary to users like me, and I should be allowed to choose whether to make use of any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and thus there is a risk of eventually driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we do not lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the foreseeable risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. that (i) CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board alteration of algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content on various online platforms should be optional and completely voluntary to users like me, and I should be allowed to choose whether to make use of any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and thus there is a risk of eventually driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we do not lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Hilco M. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Hollie A. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the risk of altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Holly L.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the risk of altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Holly A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the risk of altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Hugh T.
New Brunswick

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the risk of altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Hushar Z. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [ ] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [ ] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [ ] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - d. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - e. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - f. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - g. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - h. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - i. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - j. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - k. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - l. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - m. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - n. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - o. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - p. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - q. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - r. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - s. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - t. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - u. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - v. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - w. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - x. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - y. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - z. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify, and enhance these commitments in the final version.

Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures imposed on promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ileana W. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for algorithmic treatments of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content are from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithm work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to restate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ivan A. Quebec
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issue Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implemented discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction state that social media users and creators and their content should be voluntary and optional to use them, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issue Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implemented discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction state that social media users and creators and their content should be voluntary and optional to use them, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

4. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issue Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implemented discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction state that social media users and creators and their content should be voluntary and optional to use them, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

5. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issue Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implemented discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction state that social media users and creators and their content should be voluntary and optional to use them, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

6. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issue Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implemented discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction state that social media users and creators and their content should be voluntary and optional to use them, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Jack M.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jack C.
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am seeking ways to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am seeking ways to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am seeking ways to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned citizen in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed by online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings are required to respect audience choice and expression, and where possible, increase the options available.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Removing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - That the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jen A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Removing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - That the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

James P. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Removing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - That the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

James M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Removing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - That the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

James B. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Removing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - That the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

James C. New Brunswick

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Removing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - That the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

James A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Removing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - That the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Promoting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

James A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Promoting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

James B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Promoting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

James C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Promoting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

James D. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Promoting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

James E. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Promoting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "providing that social media users and creators and their content be regulated as follows:
      c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Thank you,

James W.
Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to identify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jane A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jane B. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jane C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jane D. British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",

c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",

c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "requiring social media users and creators to be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(d) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Janet H. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are provided greater options";
   c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Janice M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are provided greater options";
   c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Janice L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are provided greater options";
   c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Janice A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are provided greater options";
   c. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media views and creators and their content”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the cross-border algorithmic filters. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Janice J. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media views and creators and their content”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the cross-border algorithmic filters. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Janice M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media views and creators and their content”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the cross-border algorithmic filters. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Janice C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media views and creators and their content”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the cross-border algorithmic filters. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Janice P. Saskatchewan

As a concerned Canadian citizen with a right to free speech, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media views and creators and their content”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the cross-border algorithmic filters. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration in the spirit that it is intended: that all dialogue should be encouraged and respected. It is only by allowing citizens to be heard on all subjects that concern their wellbeing and by engaging in consultations that we can bring our country back into balance.

Janice A. British Columbia

Thank you very much.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media views and creators and their content”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the cross-border algorithmic filters. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Janice B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media views and creators and their content”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the cross-border algorithmic filters. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Janice L. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “ensuring social media users and creators and their content are respected”
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from any regulations that affect their content”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jason B. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft’s emphasis on online expression, I am asking you to radically enhance these commitments to the fullest.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to stabilize and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "and that the CRTC is directed to "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jason L.
New Brunswick
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
