			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choics and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make
			d. and that the CRT Cis directed to "Co respect audience rhoice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, and matter where they choose to create.  4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to consideration.  4. As a concerned person in Canada, 1 am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks proceed to online expersession, 1 am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  5. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  6. The Firstly is would like to express my strong sup
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't love access to these services.  4. Lasty, I uruge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  4. See a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  4. Franky I would like the express my strong support for the foliowing guidance in the policy direction:  5. Pranky I would like the express my strong support for the foliowing guidance in the policy direction:  6. "employment grows and the content from regulation",  6. (The) CRTC (Si directed to 1'C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.  8. "content grows and content and the content from regulation",  6. (The) CRTC (Si directed to 1'C) respect audience
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience rhoice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks carry on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to essure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to consideration.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to essure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to considerations are always to a soliding and enhance these commitments in the final version.  4. Expl., I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  5. Expl., I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction and support for promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and golicy directions in any total minimizants the need to allow advantage in respect to programs of social media creators;  6. Listly, I urge the inclusion of a di

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"mplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use sers like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to bow online algorithms work should let me does whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
charles	r.	Ontario	L loss you will take in y leedousk into Consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version is the contraction of the property of the prop
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "TRIC's directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charles	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (hg) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Listy, Turgle the inclusion of a inerction to ensure rair and equal treatment for all Lahadian online creators, Any mancial or promotion opportunities created by self-clinic implementation must be equally available to all Lahadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charles	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the *CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unaminguously, so we durn does access or unsees en vices.  Al Lastly, I cape the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charles	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charles	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",</li> </ul>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charles	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implamenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  (The! "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CHARLES	м.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. the ICXTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on coline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and the LCXTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on coline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and the LCXTC is directed to (c) createst qualence choice and, where possible, increase the options availables";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Charles	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	_		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to supress my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. implementing discoverability provision is in a very that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation." c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
			C. [tins]: Unit. S GirtCit on for impose regulatory requirements of online independent of programs of social mean creators; d. and that the GirtCit is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user is like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me close whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			inside whee due to deate.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charles	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media creators"
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
charles	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. *Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understanges"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and online to undertaking in respect of programs of social media users and only the processing of the programs of social media creators"; d. and that CRTC is directed to (°) (er specta undernote choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user is like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charles	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charles	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charley	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks goosed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charlie	R.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Some of the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charlie	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charlie	v.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect auditione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Charlotte	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chanotte	r.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing biscore analyty provision at it is a way of untilinizes the reset of a after adjustinis or inductioning interesting the provision of the provision and the provision of the provi
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutionary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charlotte	w.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Charmain	l.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Criarriairi		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charmaine	F.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. (the) "CXTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Chean	D	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned nesson in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Essising Directions to the ORTI (Sustainable and Ensishable Developation D
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chelsea	D.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chelsea	D.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. That yr, "Notice late us explains in a sour gauge payon to the following gluence in the point, uncertainty, "Notice late us explains all payon greaters and the point," of the point of
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Chen	s.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clien	5.	Columbia	As a concerned citizen in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition", social media users and creators and their content from requisition",
			b. Excluding social metals uses after Creation 3 and Letter Content in More Equation 1.  C. (the) "CRIC I directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cherry	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(") respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy indiction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambibiously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cheryl	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(?) respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings dearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cheryl	К.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to entire properties. I am adding you to explain you to
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[C] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
chond		Ontario

			As a represent agency in Canada, Law pulmilities are commonted as the Order Legislan Discretized to the CEUT (Sustainable and Full-bill Provided to Provide Associated Author Foresteen Author Fo
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cheryl	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cheryl	P.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cheryl	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] CRIC id directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cheryl	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a conceiled person in Caledon, if an adding you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the force is the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cheryl	T.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [I they "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  [A and that the KRTC is directed by "Or lessect audience choice and, where sociality increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cheryl	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a chreme person in Carloso, it am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments to the Cuts (Jossaniane and Liquidae production) remembers, while a appreciate the did not provide the commitment of the
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and rearbors and their content from regulation" of the content of the
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Chor d	D	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discovariability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CMTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. than that the CMTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Cheryl	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration, and while you may find that this letter is formatted in such a way as to seem as though it's not from me directly, or that others might submit the same letter as a form letter of sorts, I ask you to note that I could not have articulated my concerns any more clearly than the way in which it's being presented here, and I sign this knowing full well that my needs and concerns have been expressed herein.
Cheryl	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," or content from regulations or content from regulations.  (Etha) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory regularements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastby, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cheryl	L.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (telp 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
CHERYL	G.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			This bill should never have been implemented. There is absolutely no reason the government should be allowed to control what we as free citizens should see or say.  It makes the "controllers" look guilty, as if they may have something to hide.
Cheryl	В.	British Columbia	I'm fairly certain 90% of Canadians would agree, but none of us were given a choice.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unanimyously, so we out it use access to tiese services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cheryll	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Does do online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chloe-Marie	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Char		New C ::	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	S.	Nova Scotia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Prince	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	L.	Edward Island	a trust you will take my reculied; mito Consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pose on conline expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Two concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Listry, Ling's the flustion of a direction to ensure rair and equal treatment for all canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by bill C-11 s implementation must be equally available to all canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [, the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	s.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	S.	Ontario

			Assessment and the Control Con
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"mplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
CHRIS	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Critas		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory regulatory and their content from respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed or to 'Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Chris	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] CTRC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
L			t was you mit due my recorded me college activities

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "deducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";     c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
a		0.41.11	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Chris	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to soliding and ennance these commitments in the final iversion.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. Ithe "CRITC is directed not to impose regulatior requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Chris	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CNRT is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRRT is directed to "[C] respect audiquence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Chris	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cirio		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks prosent to miline expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ithe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Chris	G.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CIIIIS	U.	Hamtoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(") respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Chris	0.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cirio	o.	Hamitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Chris	I.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Chris	D.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CIIIIS	υ.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Chair	1.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	J.	0	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	S.	Alberta

			As a concerned according to Chanda, I am submitted my commonts on the Order Irruina Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emiliable Decidents). While I according to the Order Irruina Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emiliable Decidents).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	м.	Alberta	As a paperand page in Canada I am submitting my commonts on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Regardanting Densilator, Grammond). While I appropriate the draft policy directions of first to address the piles.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	C.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	0.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Texcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. Texcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "Cy ("expect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; expression of the content of t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	v.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy! respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks oosed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	S.	British Columbia

			Scrap C-11 entirely!  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to drinke expression, I am assing you to solitup and relinance times communitients in the limit version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose equipations requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "tRTC is directed not to impose equipations requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. d. and "tRTC is directed into proceed creating with the possible, increase the options available". d. d. and "tRTC is directed into proceed creating with the processing of the processi
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	0.	Brunswick	To whom it may concern:
			Ab best, the CRTC's vetting of online content is unnecessary an insidirected. I am fully able to discern the quality of internet content without the help of dumay bureaucracy. The CRTC does not possess superior judgment or insight and it is insulting to have unwelcome constraint interturnenshes into the matter,
			At worst, Bill C-11 smacks or censorship and an attempt to stiffe unwelcome opinions under a thin guise of safety. Appearances matter, and C-11 appears petty and suspicious.
			C-11 should be abandoned.
			Falling that, consider the following remedial changes:
			1. First, the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatior yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. The policy lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Last, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Please owners these errors in your service to the public.
Chris	0.	Ontario	Please correct mese errors in your service to the public.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to ('C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a counting year opposition to describe the counting year opposition to the counting year of year opposition to the counting year opposition to the counting year opposition to the counting year opposition to the year opposition year opposition to the year opposition year
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. In addition, as much freedom of expression as possible.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	М.	Columbia	Communism is coming to Canada.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by 8ill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chris	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to noting expression. I am action you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators of the content of the con
			<ol> <li>a. and mat the UKIL is directed to '(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase me options available:</li> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
chris wilkins	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chaint	V	0

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christiaan	v.	British Columbia	a trust you will take my required mut consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christian	T.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christian	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christian	Z.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christiane	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a vary that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation." c. [their "CRTC" is directed to "to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Christina	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Figsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christina	М.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christina	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Christina	K.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cilisula	K.	Albeita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
christina	r.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			1. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christina	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	g.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", contine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			Let us for the CRTC is directed to "CV" (prespect adjacent continue uncertainty in respect on programs of social mean cleanus", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "CV" (prespect adjacence choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
CUDICTO		Ontoni	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CHRISTINE	U.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_flet) "CRTL's directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Christine	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) CYRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy respect auditine choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
christine	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to sonline expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Christine	V.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	٧.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, 1 am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," of the content from regulation; c. (the) "CNIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to notine expression. I am action you to coldify and enhance those commitments in the final various posed to drinine expression, I am asking you to soluting allo eminate mese commitments in the mila version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	H.	n

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'CI'/ crepect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	0.	Saskatchewa n	Truck you will take inly recourse, with Unisacerdool.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to enfine expression, I am arising you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator prequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media careators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "[C] respect adjacence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be revoluted and optional to users it like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me notice of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	D.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adultance choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Christine	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to enline expression, I am anximy you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction censure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christine	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to drainine expression, I am asking you to solutily and enhance trees commitments in the inflar version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christophe	C.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a levely that minimizes the insect to allegative moderations of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CHRISTOPH E	м.	Manitoba	a was you me was my recorded may consider studi.

			· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			t. [the] CNTC is directed into to impose regulatory reg
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Christopher		Newfoundlan d and Labrador	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	В.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	В.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	I.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (; [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Christopher	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Christopher	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation y; equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Christopher	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a wyth that imilizace be need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Christopher	c.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	Н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "decluding social media users and reterrochent from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation"</li> </ul>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	R.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	к.	Ontario	a trust you will care my recorded, mild consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidy and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Christopher		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings cleanly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will ake my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to (°) (c') respect underined rechoice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Christopher	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	C.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to notice processing. I am adding you be called a processing and the processing of the control of the
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users in the provision of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	В.	Alberta

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and it CRTC is directed to 'Cy) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and opcorat to users like me, and any LKIL-directed changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use or them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Christopher	м	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	n.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	P.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatiory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	D.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media tusers and relations and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media tusers and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Christopher	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
·			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, one don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insule where they to do so the same of the Christopher	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience rotice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and inaminimization of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and inaminimization of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and inaminimization of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and inaminimization of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services is a service of the policy direction of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and in the policy direction lacks clarity
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
christopher	К.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding South means and user and users and users of the control of the contr
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Christopher	м.	British Columbia	a dust you mit care my dequest, mot our siderabulit.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the object of rection rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutary and optional to users it like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chrystal	т.	Alberta	LUGS you will cake thy recodes, this Consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am anxiety
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chuck	S.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c_[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Chuck	P	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CHUCK		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC idented not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, one don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chun Ho	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cici	Z.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks prosent in online commension. I am address the risks prosent in online commension. I am address the risks prosent in online commension and in address the risks prosent in online commension.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", ("thei) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will ake my feedback into consideration.
Cici	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. "d. and their the CRT is directed to "(c)" respect adulatione: choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c)" respect adulatione: choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. "d. "d. "d. "d. "d. "d. "d. "d. "d. "
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cindy	C.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. than that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cindy	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cindy	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," (.the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
cindy	d.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cindy	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Cindy	S.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social metal users and creators and treat content from regulation in C. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unannihimus like. So we don't lose across to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cindy	В.	British Columbia	I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I do see that the draft policy direction attempts to address the risks posed to online expression. However, I
			Tem solutions by the content of the content is sold by the content of the content
			1. The production describes my strong in production of an interpolation of the production of the produ
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
	м.	Ontario	Thank you for considering my feedback. Yours truly,
Cindy

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei   "CRT's directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2: 10 interesting the control of the
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. Government should not have there hands in public information free speech   To much over reach by this government taking away freedom gives concern . Time we abolish government and look at something less currupt!
Cindy	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhancer these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cindy	н.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version is the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me cheeve there to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			But what I really want to know is what happened to the freedom of the internet, the sharing of information and the educational uses.  Manipulation of my feed will not benefit me, it will only limit my ability to use the internet and for the CRT to tell me what I'm allowed to see and what I'm not. I do not feel that you have the right to take away my basic right, and it is a human right,  Manipulation of my feed will not benefit me, it will only limit my ability to use the internet and for the CRT to tell me what I'm allowed to see and what I'm not. I do not feel that you have the right to take away my basic right, and it is a human right,  Manipulation of my feed will not benefit me, it will only limit my ability to use the internet and for the CRT to tell me what I'm allowed to see and what I'm not. I do not feel that you have the right to take away my basic right, and it is a human right,  Manipulation of my feed will not benefit me, it will not be a see and what I'm not. I do not feel that you have the right to take away my basic right, and it is a human right,  Manipulation of my feed will not be a see and what I'm not. I do not feel that you have the right to take away my basic right, and it is a human right,  Manipulation of my feed will not be a see and what I'm not. I do not feel that you have the right to take away my basic right, and it is a human right,  Manipulation of my feed will not be a see and what I'm not. I do not feel that you have the right to take away my basic right, and it is a human right,  Manipulation of my feed will not be a see and what I'm not. I do not feel that you have the right to take away my basic right.
			to use the internet.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cindy	F.	British Columbia	and the my conduction.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengther ecommitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial blank the final version of the policy direction used to a construct the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be under the property of the property</li></ol>
			3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Claire	м.	British Columbia	Litus, you will cake my recuback mici curisociation.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version is the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following auidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			C. [Did] Suffice Sufficient (in st. of implication of the property of the prop
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Claire	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cidire	dv.	ColuINDIA	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me change use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Claire	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", continued to the content of the content from regulation of the content from the conte
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clara	D.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," for the content from regulation, or content from regulation or content from regul
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clare	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Clarence	В.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clarence	ь.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRXT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRXT is directed to "(") respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Clark	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from required unable of the provisions in a content of the provisions of t
			b. Excluding social metables and creations and uter Control in the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Claude	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Claud		Onton	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Claudette	·.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "for research sudince choice and, where oossible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Claudia	F.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oxali media users and creators and their content from penulation".
			b. excluding social nieula uses and creations and user content nort regulator).  (c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Claudia	м.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Claudia	т.	British Columbia
			So, net neutrality in both access AND content is super important. Yes, we can work in large consensus to cut down on the propagation of hate, misinformation and other problematic content—but this cannot be done by a nationalistic lens.  Canada is known for its aspects of diversity and values of inclusion and kindness (even if in reality it is still a colonizer inheritance and still has work to do on its racist citizens, systems and factors of government.)
			So taking a turn and centering Canada as a media entity filter is counter to what Canada actually is: passive and receptive and responsive, rather than rigid and demonstrative.
			Right now, a Liberal government is in power, and for the most part, we are doing our best to be just, inclusive and consider the realities of others. If a problematic party were to take power, this filtering could further messages about exclusion, outright lies, or promotion of rigid forms of intolerance.
			There are other ways for Canadian art and media to be promoted locally and in the world. Enforcing this through essentially a form of censorship, is not the way to go.
			Canada is best as an observer, and sticking to its pillars of trust and openness—and keeping up the work of addressing what does remain problematic.  Thank you for your consideration.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clayton	K.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [] the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clayton	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Cliff	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation, "     c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";      d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cliff	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I will like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIF is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clifford	w.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerning person in Calculus; I aim automating in you continued in the continued and account to the Circle Concerning and Continued and Concerning and Continued and Concerning and Continued and Concerning and C
			a. "Implementing discinerability providers in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Clifford	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. than that the CRTC is directed to "(") crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CLIFFORD	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalition".
			u. exclusing social metal users and users and user content norm regulation from the content norm regulation (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		N . 6	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clint	T.	d and Labrador
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.    Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clint	0.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			u. exclusing social metal users and users and user content norm regulation from the content norm regulation (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clinton	w.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clinton	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iniminizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition" in the content of th
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Clyde	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cody	М.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cody	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Cody	R.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. As I do believe the Bill as it is now would be an ill advised mistake on the government's part.
Couy	K.	Albeita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Cole	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colette	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from explaition";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colette	P.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCRTC is directed by "Or lespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Colin	S.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; h. "exclusion social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter, More they choose to create.
			natter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colin	C.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing solar interest assets and versions a for their control of the contro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			the voluntary and uppoint to Uses since rine, and any EVIC - transfer and any
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colin	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. days/1 big 9 for final formation of many final fina
n. r.		0.11	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colin	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Colin	٧.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LOIII1		Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction ties out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colin	R.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoversibility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. Outliers and optional to sees like me, and sufficient of danges to have online algorithms work should let me though whether to take use of them.  The outliers and optional to sees like me, and sufficient of danges to have online algorithms work should let me though whether to take uses of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colin	Н.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerning the including
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTIc is directed to to' impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTIc is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			4. Finally, I strongly oppose any requirements for online streaming services to promote any programming or hiring/production standards relating to diversity/equity/inclusion ideology or promoting the interests of so-called "equity seeking groups" whatsoever. This measure effectively embeds progressive propaganda into entertainment products, where it has no rightful place in any capacity.
			whatsoever. Inis measure effectively embeds progressive propaganda into entertainment products, where it has no rightful place in any capacity.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colin	м.	Ontario	le Court I am a la Court I am
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			- Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colin	w.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Colin	F.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colli		Coldinola	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Colleen	C.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTIc is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTIc is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Colleen	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colleen	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
colleen	g.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	_	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colleen	E.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Collogo		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned operan in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Ironina Ricordings to the CRIT (Surthinable and Further). Provident in Providing Providing Inc.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colleen	S.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I will like to express my strong support for the following cladence in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Colleen and Steve	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Collette	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT Lis directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy is excess to these services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Collin	w.	Manitoba	As a Canadian citizen, I submit my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). Although I have heard the Myths and Facts about C-11, the Online Streaming Act, I do not believe this is enough and ask that you solidify your Facts clearly and in our best interest in the final policy.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (The) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Colton	L.	Alberta	As the commission representing Canada telecommunications, I expect you to represent our interests and use our feedback.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Prince Edward	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Connie	Z.	Island	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. 2507, Talgo til inclusion to a biscuto di essure fair and equal destrient to an Canadian orinine destries. Any minimal of promotion opportunities destried by this C-11's implementation must be equally available to an Canadian orinine destries, no matter where they choose to create our promotion of a discussion of
Connio	u	British	a usus, you min vance my recurrent mortunisheratuut.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Connie	Α.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Connor	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my storing support to the rollowing iguidance in the policy functions.  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c [thei "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. [tmg] UKI us directed not compose regulatory requirements on online uncertainties in respect or programs or social media creators; d. and that the KRTL is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. I to further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me charmed whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Connor	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Corey	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Corey	В.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; [15th 1707] in direction of the content of the content from regulation is present of programs of cools made in the content of the content of programs of cools made in the content of th
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available).  7. To further creamitiment to individual choice, and expression, it is much both the program of the policy direction rules out program and appropriate control to the program of the policy direction rules out program and appropriate control to the program of the policy direction rules out program out program of the policy direction rules out program out
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Corey	P.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRIF is dereted not to impose regulation;" c. [the] "CRIF is dereted not to i
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be replaced as the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be replaced upon the replaced as the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be replaced as the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			We as canadians are able to reach canadian content at will. These restrictions will more negatively affect us and content producers in canada.
			Hear us and please respect our earnest requests. (as our representatives)
cornelius	v.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Corrine	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Get rid of the porn, child porn and the adult dirty websites. Stop controlling our life, what we want to read, watch, see and news outlets. Canada is a free country that our democracy and rights is being destroyed. Listen to the people. Stop!!!  It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Corry		British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "impl, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "pelmenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Corwin	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			<ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Cory	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cory	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cory	c.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cory	н.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To further subsignient direct confinitioners to intervious closed and expression, is a Closed rate, the hard or any expression is now of the control argonization entirely. Any measures a mine as promoting Canadian Contents should be the choice whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Corv	Α.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
courrielamic he@gmail.	:		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
com	М.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		0.11.11	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Courtney	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available":
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Covey	w.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverations provisions in a way that minimizes the near to after algorithms of productioning in the control of the content from regulation."  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation."  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			inster where unity those to teate.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Craig	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underskings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Craig	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. Exhaulting south measures and the control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any UKI L-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Craig	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks good to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "syrulding sorial media users, and restroates and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	L		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Craig	F.	Alberta

			One point I would like to make is CBC which is hugely subsidised to provide Canadians with their news. Should provide Canadian news to its people, or we will have a very ignorant population. More and rdropping as well. CBC should be required to provide news via 'all news outlets' which include google and fasebook, not exclude them.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulation view undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Craig	S.	Ontario	First, I wish to remind you that all censorship is an affront to the freedom of expression quaranteed in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and should be rejected outright. This includes the economic censorship that the current system of monopolistic internet providers are using to price so many Canadians out of the ability to participate in online discourse.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			se voumely area opposition to uses after ing, and any Constructed unings or information on some any of the consequence of the c
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Contin	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Craig	F	Untario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will ake my feedback into consideration.
Craig	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. Exclusing social meterial bases and creators and unter Content from regulation;  C [the] "CRIS directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Craig	F.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Craig	r.	Mailitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. The "CRRIC is directed not to impose regulator prequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Crey	Α.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "I would be a support to the support of the su
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Cristal	G.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cristina	P.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambliquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Crystal	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Crystal	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (I the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakinos in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cullen	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a per jointy unexual properties of the provisions of the p
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Curt	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed or "(c)" expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Curtis	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cyc respect audience choice and, where cossible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
curtis	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media careators"; d. and that the KTC is directed to 'C) crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Curtis	В.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			to. Exclusing social means and references and viter content from regulation /,  (E) the j "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Curtis	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Curtis	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Curtis	s.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Cynthia	R.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cynthia	н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exclusing social metal users and treatures and their content from regulation."  C [the] "CRTs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cynthia	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  We are supposed to be a free country. We do not need to be censored.
			I do not agree with this Bill.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cynthia	В.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d., and hat the CRTC is directed to (?c) respect, adulatione; choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastry, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no mater where they choose to create the contract of the contrac
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cynthia	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionec robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4: LESSY, Tugle the industrial of the cutoff
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
cyril	I.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
D	N.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am anxiety
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no match yet produce the create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
D	М.	Ontario	As I could not have written a better comment, myself, I am promoting the following letter that I have read thoroughly and with which I agree, on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework
			I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, yet, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be vountary and opportate to uses like time, and any CNT-Control to the control t
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
a	w.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
D. Brett	L.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
D8	н.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. Lasty, Toge the inclusion or a direction to elistic fair and equal destinent for an Canadian orinine deators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daisy	М.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Textuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. Textuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy ("respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; expression of the content of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daksh	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. It is styl, in would like to express in it is unjustified to the inviting squared, in the point, where the inviting squared is a "Implementing discoverability provisions in a wight that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "ROTE is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dale	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "seculating social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "seculating social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to "(c)" (express tauledines choice and, where possible, in creases the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dale	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
dale	m.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implamentage discovershibly provision as in swy that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "RCIF is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dale	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ this] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed by (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dalo

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I would prefer C11 be completely abolished. Considering the Trudeau government doesn't care about Freedom and citizens rights, below are changes to help mitigate the damage.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dale	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Duic		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and or "or "or "or "or "or "or "or "or "or
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dalel	w.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Damian	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Damian	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (Fithe 1/CRT is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Damin-	D	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Damian	D.	columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTIc is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTIc is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Damiano	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerned person in Calcular, I of it automating in profilements or the order issuing of increases a concerned person in Calcular, I off it automating in profilements or the order issuing out confidence or the concerned person in Calcular, I off it automating out to confidence or the concerned person in Calcular, I off it automating out to concern the concerned person in Calcular or the Cal
			1. Hrsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay with art minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay with art minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay with a minimize the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverability of the need to alter algorithms of the need to all the need to a matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the di *CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the di *CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Damon	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dallion		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "Natio is directed not to impose regulation y on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Damon	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed to (°) (er sepect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available".  Here is a considerable of the consi
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRC-directed changes to how online alornthism work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Damon	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on oriline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Damon	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			to. Excluding social metale users and serious facilities from regulation;  (E the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dan	м.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Duii		Drunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementation discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the needs to alter allocortiums of providence;
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIS idented not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dan	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "svulving sorial media users and restricts and their content from repulsition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dan	Α.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dan	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dan	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] *CRTs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dan	s.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Duii	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online metakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
DAN	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding south means are a rule causes and the content from regulation."  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dan	U.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dan	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (; [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dan	K.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social medical basis and useful control and user control and the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dan	В.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			L sasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dan	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
-			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dan	3.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] 'CATC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Labory, Tugle to the Colosio of a Direction to ensure ran and equal deathers to an canadian dismite clearly. An international opportunities cleared by an C-11 simplementation must be equally available to an Canadian dismite clearly, no matter where the colosio for a Direction of the Colosio of the Colosio of the Colosio of the Colosio of a Direction of the Colosio of the Colo
Dan	R.	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dall	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dan	S.	Ontario	Concerning the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework):
			Concerning the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework):  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
			> "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"
			> "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"
			> "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available" > rule out entirely algorithm alteration > fue out entirely algorithm alteration  > do not drive out small and niche foreign services from Canada > ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators
Dan	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Dan	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Dan	М.	Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strops support for the following suitance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition" to a certain extent;  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition" to a certain extent;
Dan	М.	Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Dan	м.	Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation" to a certain extent. c their Cort Cort Cort Cort Cort Cort Cort Cor
Dan	М.	Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Friety, I avoid like to appraise my strong support for the following updates in the policy direction:  a melenating discoverability provisions in a way that minimize the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation for a certain extent.  c. [the] "CRTC is directed and creators and their content from regulation for a certain extent.  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to rot to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation for a certain extent.  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to "C)" respect adultationer choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. If I disagree at times, and certain areas (Not all) are mandatory, I will understand if I cannol involve myself.
Dan	М.	Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strops support for the following quisdance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation" to a certain extent.  c. [the] "CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from repulsation" to a certain extent.  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to "C!" expect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the endough optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to have online algorithms works should let me choice of them. If I disagree at times, and certain areas (Not all) are mandatory, I will understand if I cannot
Dan	М.	Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation" to a certain extent. c. (the) [*CRIC is directed not bropose regulatory requirements on nonline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. If I disagree at times, and certain areas (Not all) are mandatory, I will understand if I cannot involve myself.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign, and domestic, services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings
Dan	М.	Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings and algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. If I disagree at times, and certain areas (Not all) are mandatory, I will understand if I cannot involve myself.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign, and domestic, services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			<ul> <li>excusions social media users an oreastors and oneir content from regulation;</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
dana	m.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dana	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "sexuluring social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "sexuluring social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and in *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and in *CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dana		Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dana	Li	Allocita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dana	W.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverations provisions in a way trust imminizes the need to after adjointmists or organizatings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators.";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
		Deibieb	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Danial	н.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation", social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose across to those services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Danial	Α.	British Columbia
			STOP C11  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "sexuluring social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "sexuluring social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Danial	k.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CNRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect sudience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Name	matter where they choose to create.
Danica	Α.	d and Labrador	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Danica	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dallica	PI.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Danice	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	В.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	М.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the indusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	v.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			b. Excluding Social metables that Clearly and the Control of the C
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	Α.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	J.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	н.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
DANIEL	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media tusers and relations and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media tusers and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from receives the options available," c. [their CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available,"
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	A.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks onesed to online excression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			**************************************
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	C.	British Columbia

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			to. Exacional social metale users and return contain from registrom, respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. "Ethe" YCRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Daniel	К.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	K.	Coldinbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online workstaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	H.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "decluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";     c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
B	_	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	F.	Columbia	En tant que citoyen de Longueuii, au Québec, Canada, Je présente mes commentaires sur le Décret donnant des instructions au CRTC (Cadre de réglementation de la radiodiffusion durable et équitable). Bien que j'apprécie les efforts déployés par le projet d'orientation stratégique pour aborder les risques posés à l'expression en ligne, je vous demande de consolider et d'améliorer ces engagements dans la version finale.
			1. Tout d'abord, je tiens à exprimer mon ferme appui à l'orientation stratégique suivante : a. « mettre en œuvre les dispositions relatives à la découvrabilité de manière à réduire au minimum la nécessité de modifier les algorithmes des entreprises de radiodiffusion »;
			b. « exclure de la réglementation les utilisateurs et les créateurs de médias sociaux et leur contenu », c. « les droinné au CRTC de ne pas imposer d'exigences réglementaires aux entreprises en ligne à l'égard des émissions des créateurs de médias sociaux »; d. « le que le CRTC soit tenu de « c) respecter le choix de l'auditoire et, dans la mesure du possible, accroître les options disponibles »
			2. Afin de renforcer davantage ces engagements à l'égard du choix et de l'expression individuels, il est crucial que la version finale de l'orientation politique exclue toute modification générale de l'algorithme. Toute mesure visant à promouvoir le contenu canadien devrait être volontaire et facultative pour les utilisateurs comme moi, et tout changement dirigé par le CRTC au fonctionnement des algorithmes en ligne devrait me laisser le choix de les utiliser ou non.
			<ol> <li>Je crains que l'orientation stratégique ne soit pas claire quant aux services qui devraient être réglementés, et qu'elle risque de faire fuir du Canada les petits services étrangers et les services spécialisés. La dernière directive doit définir clairement et sans ambiguité la portée appropriée des entreprises en ligne, afin que nous ne perdions pas l'accès à ces services.</li> </ol>
			4. Enfin, je recommande vivement l'inclusion d'une directive visant à assurer un traitement juste et équitable à tous les créateurs canadiens en ligne. Toutes les possibilités de financement ou de promotion créées par la mise en œuvre du projet de loi C-11 doivent être accessibles à tous les créateurs canadiens en ligne, peu importe où ils choisissent de créer.
			Que Dieu nous garde tous, afin que nous puissions demeurer des Êtres humains digne de ce nom,  Daniel P.
Daniel	P.	Quebec	Longueuil, QC.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To Curther strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Daniel		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
- unit		Ornalio

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. It is style in doubline to express in its study support to the indivining guidante. In the point of metabolis.  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to *(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			WHEN THE GOVERNMENT INTERVENES WITH FREE SPEECH IN JOURNALISM, THAT OPENS THE DOOR TO TOTALITARIANISM AND CENSORSHIP OF THE TRUTH.
Daniel	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation", to. Excluding social metal users and serious and other locations are supported by the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>in implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>invaduding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>it [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Daniel	N.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniel	F.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Daniel	К.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniela	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daniela	IP.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
daniele	p.	Ontario	And the second s
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration and I thank you for your time in reading my comments.
Danielle	s.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where or what they choose to create.
			I strongly disagree with the creation of a CRTC, and strongly condemn altering our access to online content in any way. This is not the will of the people, who you are a servant and representative of. I find Bill C-11 deeply shameful, misleading and ripe for abuse of power. You are a blight on our way of life, and any attempt to monitor or control our access to information is reprehensible.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Danielle	J.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidages in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Danimal	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Danny	E.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restroactors and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Danny	N.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dunity		Jinua 10	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Danny	т.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Danny	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dallily	3.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Danny	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to (°) crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available." Here is a considerable of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dante	٧.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhancer these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Danuta	к.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and 1 arCRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Danuta	0.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		0.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dany	L.	Quebec	As we speak for our a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			a. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and excression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daphne	S.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to extrooming social instead assist and useful control and useful cont
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Darcy	R.	Prince Edward Island	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underskings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Darcy	w.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darcy	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darcy	В.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c.
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Darek			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darek	P.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social medial users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Darell	В.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darell	J.	wova Scould	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. *excluding social medial users and reators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Darian	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daridii	116	Conditions	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Davi :	_	0-1-	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darin	T.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darin	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Darin	I.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darius	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy ("expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dariusz	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darleen	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
DARLENE	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Textuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "O'; (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Darlene	B.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			d. Excluding social measures and sections and settle content from regulation,  (E the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darlene	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Our freedoms are constantly at stake_government policies that affect our social lives should not be enacted without any consultation from the people of Canada  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darlene	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darlene	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. *Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understanger; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation? c. [thei] *CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and to the content of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darlyne	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darrel	Р.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Exclusing social mental users and treative and their content from regulation."  C. [the] "CRTs is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			nature where mey choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darrell	E.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darrell	S.	British Columbia

			Assessment and the Control I was about the Control I was a second of the Control I was a second
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darren	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darren	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darren	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darren	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darryl	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks observed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRIC's directed NO! to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			7. Lossy, 1 uge use the change of the change
Darryl	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darrul	-	Calumbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Darryn	E.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available?  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Daryl	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daryi	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daryl	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daryl	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. This bill is largely about considered. However, less is more.
			2. Secondly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  3. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  4. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			5. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Daryl	S.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. As I started out, less is more. We need all opinions. Canada is a great land. It was built on melding diversity.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Datrie	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to college properties. I am action you to called an address the properties of the first person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C the I "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dave	N.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to Impose regulatory requirements on conline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and ICRTC is directed to 'to' (or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	В.	Ontario	a uses you will case my recourse mad consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dave	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online directakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dave	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Duve		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dave	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			<ul> <li>excluding social media users an are records and meir content from regulation',</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and inaminimusly. So we don't have accress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastry, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	R.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dave	0.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discovability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;     c. [the] "CRTC identicated in directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	к.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the! "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dave	N.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
bure		Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
dave	f.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dave	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	P.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			I concur with the message to this point. However I must dad a few items of consideration.
			P.S.  With the world fast approching a bivy of currancy adjustments this boondoggle of a c-11 has dramaticly soured the process.  Is the purposs to supress free speeck, to re-elect a failed party whose bolster reigned from foreign enterprise both by foreign currancey and by manipulations via interesting non Canadian of dubvious credentials with dual citicenship, mocking the real Canadian choice, neutering how Canadians want in choice, adding insult to the magnitude of our injury by forstalling GESARA Quantum Financial System which provides freedom and sovereighty to the masses who strongly desire it. It also prohibit war by eliminating the magnatude of funds hidden, not transparent assured as tunnels of children to maciate at criminalities with this the real reason to be anxicious about shuting down the citizens of this once great country(never great with nontransperancy through olicary ultra propagandas through pay for buy our own taxes by hidden payoffs to all medias.  Truth will be gone, the lies they are afraid of are the governments own not bein heared or caught and over shadowed by a keen public.
			No No to censorship.  One has to be daft to not see the Censorship hearings trying to demand goveenment restrictions that ignore the true meaning of there second amendment. C-11 must not break that code of Christ 'do no harm.
Dave	w.	Ontario	Dave Windsor Who are you to tell anyone what they can read, listen to, and watch?
			Your arrogance rivals that of young Castro.
Dave	C.	Ontario	If you had any decency, you'd dissolve this ancient alphabet commission and resign.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chave whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			inster where they choose of team.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c; the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (°) (e respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dave	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	Α.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discovariability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			C. (tell) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dave	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Nowfoundlan	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	н.	d and Labrador
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discovability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social metal uses and creators and the control in the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	м.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding accolal media users and creators and their content from regulations." b. "excluding accolal media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. and that the CRIT is directed to "following choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRIT is directed to "following choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
DAVID	м.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	C.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	S.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
David		Overhor	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David		Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
david	m.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
david	S.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
uaviu	5.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
David	к.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
David	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daviu	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	H.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalistion".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [c.   the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  [d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy (respect audience choice and where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	0.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"mplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
david	k.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c the] CTRC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [c the] CTRC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c the] CNIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [c the] CNIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			d. Exclusing such annual users and return claims and return from regulation?  (I the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
David	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
D. 11		0.11.11	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; content in the second
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	G.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	L.	Ontario	a trust you will take my recruised into consuleration.
			As a concerned persor in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online staking you to solidary and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			C. [md] Ckil. as Sirection not on impose gualitative grounds and an account of the Ckil. Ckil. (Ckil. as a child in the Ckil. as a child in the Ckil. (Ckil. as a c <ol> <li>To further strengther these committents to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction pelocy direction these out across-the-board algorithm afteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be recommended to the content of the pelocy direction pelocy direction pelocy direction pelocy direction.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerned person in Canada, 1 am submitting my comments on the urder issuing Directions to the Cucil (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), while 1 appreciate the draft policy direction s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
David	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalistion".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			**************************************
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation "respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTL is diffracted to "fol respect audienges, choice and twee spoasible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
David	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pavid	u.	JIIIailU

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discovariability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	Α.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	w.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. In the property of the prop
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	В.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," regulation," regulation, "content from regulation," respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "for present sudiquent choice and, where possible, increase the oothors available", in the content of the conte
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
DAVID	P.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the]: CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and 3.1 in Conceive data the planty intercont lasts deality on which services should be regulated, and itses arising shall also a mining shall are interested to the Callada. The mining deality and unantificially so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	н.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", second my social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the "CRTC is directed to "Cy) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
DAVID	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	D.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. acquaint and success and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRTL's directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
David	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
David	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
David	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y content from regulation", cc. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	G.	Columbia

			As a concerned corres in Canada. Lam submitting my composition to the Order Israina Disortings to the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developed in Canada. Lam submitting my composition to the Order Israinable and Emiliable Developed in Canada.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	E.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me to use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	C.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
David	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			inhementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the neet or later algorithms of oreaccasing undertakings;     in-excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     it is considered in the provision of the content from regulation or online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
DAVID	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "exulution social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			<ul> <li>excluding social menior users an or reacros and meir content from regulation',</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
David	3.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
David	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Daviu	5.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
David	K.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	N.	Yukon	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	W.	Yukon	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Introduction: Bill C-11, officially known as the Digital Charter Implementation Act, 2020, has sparked intense debate in Canada due to concerns about its potential infringement on the Canadian Constitution and the online freedom of citizens. This summary argues that Bill C-11 should be repealed, as it grants excessive power to the government, allowing for censorship and control that undermines fundamental rights and liberties.  Violation of the Canadian Constitution:
			Bill C-11 raises significant constitutional concerns, particularly regarding the protection of freedom of expression and privacy. Section 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees freedom of thought, belief, opinion, and expression, yet the bill introduces mechanisms that could limit these rights online. The broad scope of censorship powers bestowed upon the government under this legislation raises serious questions about its compliance with constitutional principles.
			Government Overreach: The implementation of Bill C-11 provides the government with excessive control over online content, granting them the authority to regulate and censor digital platforms. This level of intervention threatens the open exchange of ideas and limits citizens' ability to freely express themselves. By expanding the government's power, the bill undermines the principles of democracy, where a diverse range of opinions and perspectives should be protected and fostered.
			Chilling Effect on Innovation and Creativity:
			Bill C-11's stringent copyright provisions and stringent enforcement mechanisms may stifle innovation and creativity. By imposing heavy penalties and liabilities on content creators and digital platforms, the legislation discourages the development of new services, technologies, and creative works. The chilling effect on innovation could hinder Canada's digital economy and undermine its global competitiveness.
			Inadequate Safeguards for Privacy: The bill also raises concerns regarding the protection of online privacy rights. While the legislation purports to enhance privacy protections, there are valid concerns that the provisions may fall short of safeguarding citizens' personal information adequately. The potential for abuse and unauthorized access to individuals' data remains a pressing concern, underscoring the need for stronger privacy safeguards.
			Lack of Transparency and Accountability:  Bill C-11 lacks sufficient provisions to ensure transparency and accountability in the exercise of government powers. The bill's language and mechanisms for decision-making may leave room for subjective interpretation and arbitrary decision-making.
			Without robust oversight and accountability mechanisms, there is a risk that the government could abuse its authority, leading to censorship and unjust restrictions on online content.
			Conclusion: Bill C-11 represents a significant threat to the Canadian Constitution and the fundamental rights of citizens, impeding online freedom and granting the government excessive powers to control and censor online content. To safeguard the principles of democracy, protect freedom of expression, foster innovation, and ensure privacy rights, it is imperative to repeal Bill C-11 and pursue a more balanced and constitutionally sound approach to digital regulation in Canada.
		d and	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	L.	Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC 5 directed not to impose regulation yr equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of hem.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
David	F.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c_[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; di, and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect underece choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. Government bodies should have ZERO INFLUENCE on what I see, or can choose to see in my feeds when said material complies with laws to insure the safety of individuals or groups (ie: child exploitation/abuse, revenge porn, etc).
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	T.	Nova Scotia	Lucs, you will dake my recubes mo consideration.
			Guck you trudeau you got damn rat scumbag piece of shit. Let me do what I wanna do. The government has no business deciding what I should and shouldn't watch. If we are truly free, then this decision should be left to the individual. Get your greasy trust fund nepoties thands out of my got damn pockets you swine. Eat shit and die
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	G.	Nova Scotia	Lucs, you will care my reculack mo consuleration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			a. Implementing usclar wear admits in a way trust minimizes the neet to after algorithms of productioning in the content from the production of the content from the content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media screators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the lopicy (irection rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be for boundary and optional to users like me, and any (IRC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choicy developed to the color of the col
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	L.	Quebec	to a form and the my recorded meeting control of the meeting and the meeting control of the
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I do not appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to supress and censor online expression, I am asking you to abandon these overreaches in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". In other words, allow opting out of any algorithms that would emphasize or promote any content based on country of origin.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. In other words, it must allow and enforce an "opt out" provision.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where, or what, they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
david	g.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the rollowing gludance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose requistory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be vocationary and opcoming to describe the control of the control
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
David	v.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "Educuling social media users and creators and their content from regulation";     b. "Educuling social media users and creators and their content from regulation";     b. "Educuling social media users and creators and their content from regulation";     b. "Educuling social media users and creators and their content from regulation";     c. "Educuling social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. *Implamentaging discoverability provision is a very last minimizes be need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; c [the] "XRIC is directed not to impose regulationy; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  HAHAHA yeah right you are all clueless and seem to have no idea what you are doing with regards to technology. Looks like you're going to do whatever you want anyway despite no Canadians wanting any of this. Thanks, imbeciles. Don't let the
David	1.	Ontario	neverthe year right, you are an cueres and seem to have no used what you are doing with regards to technology. Lows like you're going to be whatever you want anyway despite no Canadians waiting any or this. Thanks, indeclies. Don't let the door hit you on your behinds when you lose the next election.
Daviu	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy (expects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			*. Lasty, Long eith inclusion or a direction to elistic fair and equal deathers for an Caradian online deators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	н.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "CyC respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the flavor in the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lack services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiauously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	J.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	В.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	к.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; a provision of the strong that the str
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
David	к.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
David	L.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David	L.		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
David	L.		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. 'Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter adjointhm of broadcasting undertakings'; b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation', c [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';
David	L.		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to I'c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. It is time to revisit the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film Production is somethow substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order
David	L.		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. It is time to resist the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film Production is somethow substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order to survive and flourish. Such is not the case. Music and film producers in Canada have "come of age" and should now be able to support themselves.
David	L		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings'; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation', d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.  2. It is time to revisit the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film Production is somethow substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order to survive and flourish. Such is not the case. Music and film producers in Canada have "come of age" and should now be able to support themselves.  3. Canada's music and film industries have experienced significant growth and success over the years. The country has produced internationally recognized artists and filmmakers, demonstrating that Canadian talent can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The industry's self-austaining nature is a testament to its commercial viability and the ability of artists and filmmakers to generate revenue independently.
David	L		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjornthms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. It is time to revisit the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film Production is somethies substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order to survive and flourish. Such is not the case. Music and film producers in Canada have "come of age" and should now be able to support themselves.  3. Canada's music and film industries have experienced significant growth and success over the years. The country has produced internationally recognized artists and filmmakers, demonstrating that Canadian talent can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The industry's self-sustaining barbaries is a testimated in difficult distribution platforms and streaming services, have revolutionized the music and film industries. These platforms have opened up new avenues for artists and filmmakers to monetize their work directly, reducing the need for extensive government support. The accessbilly and reach of digital platforms have allowed Canadian creators to connect with audiences globally
David	L		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adaptiviths of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. It is time to resist the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film producers in canadia have "come of age" and should now be able to support themselves.  3. Canada's music and film industries have experienced significant growth and success over the years. The country has produced internationally recognized artists and filmmakers, demonstrating that Canadian talent can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The industry's self-sustaining barture is a testament to its commercial viability and the administrative government support. The industry's self-sustaining barture is a testament to tis commercial viability and the control produced in the produced in the music and film industries have experienced significant growth and success over the years. The country has produced internationally recognized artists and filmmakers, demonstrating that Canadian Island can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The industry is self-sustaining services; have evolutionized the music and film industries. These platforms have opened up new avenues for artists and filmmakers to monetize their work directly, reducing the need for extensive government support. The accessibility and reach of di
David			As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  3. Eventuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation',  6. Celt heil "RTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  8. It is time to revisit the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film Production is somehow substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order to survive and flourish. Such is not the case. Music and film producters in Canada have 'Come of age' and should now be able to support themselves.  3. Canada's music and film industries have experienced significant growth and success over the years. The country has produced internationally recognized artists and filmmakers, demonstrating that Canadian talent can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The industry's self-sustaining nature is a testament to its commercial viability and and film industries.  4. Technological advancements, particularly in digital distribution platforms and streaming services, have revolutionized the music and film industries. These platforms have opened up new avenues for artists and filmmakers to monetize their work directly, reducing the need for extensive government support. The accessibility and reach of digital platforms have allowed Canadian creators to connect with audiences globally and generate revenue thr
David	L		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation',  c. their 'CRTC is directed to 'C; expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available';  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C; expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available';  2. It is time to revisit the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film Production is somethow substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order to survive and flourish. Such is not the case. Music and film producers in Canada have "come of age" and should now be able to support themselves.  2. Canada's music and film industries have expendenced significant growth and success over the years. The country has produced internationally recognized artists and filmmakers, demonstrating that Canadian talent can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The industry's self-sustaining nature is a testament to its commercial viability and the ability of artists and filmmakers, demonstrating that Canadian talent can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The cause is a session of the content of the provider is a self-sustaining nature is a testament to its commercial viability and the ability of artists and filmmakers, developed arobusing of the provider is approached to the provider intern
David	L		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. It is time to revisit the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film Production is somehow substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order to survive and flourish. Such is not the case. Music and film producers in Canadian have flourish such is not the case. Music and film producers in Canadian later flourish and flourish such as the except the provider some substantial plant Canadian talent can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The industry's self-sustaining nature is a testament to its commercial viability and the ability of artists and filmmakers to generate revenue independently.
David	L		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  3. Eventualing social media users and creators and their content from regulation',  6. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available';  7. It is time to revisit the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film Production is somethows substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order to survive and flourish. Such is not the case. Music and film producers in Canada have "come of age" and should now be able to support themselves.  2. Canada's music and film industries have experienced significant growth and success over the years. The country has produced internationally recognized artists and filmmakers, demonstrating that Canadian talent can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The industry's self-sustaining nature is a testament to its commercial viability and the ability of artists and filmmakers to generate revenue independently.  4. Technological advancements, particularly in digital distribution platforms and streaming services, have revolutionized the music and film industries. These platforms have opened up new avenues for artists and filmmakers to monetize their work directly, reducing the need for extensive government support. The connective platform in the provider is substantially and generate revenue through various channels, suc
David	L		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guideance in the policy direction:  a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes a place and a provided and the content from regulation,"  b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"  c. Ind) 'Extra City of the Carte of th
David	L		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings'; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,' d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cly respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'  2. It is time to revisit the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film Production is somehow substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order to survive and flourish. Such is not the case. Music and film importances in Canada have' corne of age <sup>2</sup> and should now be able to support themselves.  2. It is time to revisit the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film Production is somehow substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order to survive and flourish. Such is not the case. Music and film importance is a substance of the support themselves.  2. It is time to revisit the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Amazine and Amazine and Florent Amazine
David	L		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submittion my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I round like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I round like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I round like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I round like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I round like to express my strong support from Canadian for the following guidance of the concept that canadian their content from regulation;  2. (I bit if the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film roduction is somehow substandard and in dire need of financial support from Canadian Broadcasters and now from the on-line streaming content providers in order survive and floriums. Such is not the case. Music and film producers in Canadia have 'come of age' and should now be able to support themselves.  2. Canadia's music and film industries have experienced significant growth and success over the years. The country has produced internationally recognized artists and filmmakers to generate revenue independently.  4. Technological advancements, particularly in digital distribution platforms and streaming services, have revolutionized the music and film industries. Direct platforms have opened up new avenues for artists and filmmakers to connect with audiences, flowing and supporting canadian taient. They provide resources, grants, and mentorship engages to help artists and filmmakers to connect with audiences (plobally and generate revenue through various channels, such as treaming, connect with audiences also, and li
David	L		As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firely, I nould be to express my strong support for the following guidence in the policy directions.  2. Firely, I nould be to express my strong support for the following guidence in the policy direction.  3. Providence of the control
David			As a concerned Canadian edizon, I am submitting my comments on the Onter Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appraciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms in the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of transcriptions of the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of the concept that Canadian Music Production, and Canadian film products in somether to survive and flourish. Such is not the case. Music and film produces in Canadia have "come of age" and should now be able to support themselves.  3. Canada's music and film industries have experienced significant growth and success over the years. The country has produced internationally recognized artists and filmmakers, demonstrating that Canadian talent can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The industry's self-sustaining nature is a testament to its commercial viability and the ability of artists and filmmakers, demonstrating that Canadian talent can compete on a global scale without extensive government support. The industry's self-sustaining nature is a testament to its commercial viability and the ability of artists and filmmakers to generate revenue through various channels, such as streaming discovernment support. The industry's self-sustaining nature is a testament to its commercial viability and the ability of artists and filmmakers to generate revenue through by provision shames to monetize their work directly, reducing the need for extensive government support. The accessibility and reach of digital platforms have generate revenue through the need for extensive government support.
David			As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to olidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  3. Firshly, I record that the Location are started asking and the control of the Education and the Control of the Cont
		Columbia	As a concerned Canadian citzen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Braadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. J am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  In Firstly, I mand the Canadian protein and the Canadian Information of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Braadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address and their content of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Braadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to continue the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Braadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction and the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Braadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction and the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Braadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction and the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Braadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction and the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Braadcasting) and the CRTC (Sustainable Braadcasting) and the CRTC (Sustainable Braadcasting) and the CRTC (Sustainable Braadcasting) and Equitable Braadcasting) and the CRTC (Sustainable Braadcasting) and Equitable Braadcasting) and Equitable Braadcasting and Indianable Braadcasting) and Equitable Braadcasting and Indianable Braad
David J	L.		As a concerned Canadian citzen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidily and enhance these commitments in the final version.  In Firstly, I would like to express my rather guidance produces and the policy direction's a "emplanements" of account of the policy direction" a "emplanements" of account of the policy direction" as "emplanements" of account of the policy direction" as "emplanements" of account of the policy direction" as "emplanements" of account of the policy direction of the policy direction" as "emplanements" of a contraction of the policy direction of
	L.	Columbia	As a concerned Canadian citzen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am ability you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my record appoint for the following guidance in the policy direction: 2. Emplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; 3. Cell 1901 CRTC is directed not to impose requisitory regulatory reg
	L.	Columbia	As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am sainting you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final vivion.  1. Firstly, I would be the express my strong support from Individuory guidance in the policy direction.  2. "Inplication of the control of the con
	C.	Columbia	As a concerned Canadian citzen, I am admitted my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I should be the expression and support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Firstly, I should be the expression and support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. Firstly, I should be the expression and support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. Firstly, I should be the expression and the expression and the expression of the expression and the expression of the expression and the expression an
	C.	Columbia	As a concerned Canedam citizen, I am submitting my comments on the CMTC (Sustainable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's differs to address the risis pased to online appreciator, I am assisting via to safely and enhance these comminments in the first version.  1. Firstly, I most like to eurosemy active group for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. The Policy Turnic is directed for I for the contract of the contra
	L.	Columbia	As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directories to the CRITC (Sustainable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directoris efforts to address the risks pased to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  In Fastly, I most like a capture of the solid control of the CRITC (Sustainable and Equilation Sustainable and Equilatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directoris efforts to address the risks pased and capture and their control of the CRITCH (Sustainable and Equilatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directoris efforts to address the risks pased and capture and the control of the CRITCH (Sustainable and Equilatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directoris and the control of the CRITCH (Sustainable and Equilatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directoris and capture in the CRITCH (Sustainable and Equilatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directoris and capture in the CRITCH (Sustainable and Equilatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directoris and the CRITCH (Sustainable and Equilatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directoris and the CRITCH (Sustainable and Equilatory Sustainable and CRITCH (Sustainable and CRITCH (Sustai
	C.	Columbia	As a concerned Canedian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CITC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's defirst to address the raise posed to online expersacy, I am asking you to solidy and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Farstly, I noted that is expersany or tomage guidance in the policy direction.  2. Farstly, and that is expersany or tomage guidance in the policy direction of the control of th
		Columbia	As a concerned Canadam citizen, I am submitted my comments on the Order featuring Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to official expression, I am submitted my comments on the Order feature and control and the comment of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed in the feature and control and the comment of the control and the comment of the control and the comment of the control and the c

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
David Yeun	Р.	Quebec	As a concerned opera in Chanda I am submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Francescate the destination of the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Francescate the destination of the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Francescate the destination of the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Francescate the destination of the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Francescate the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Francescate the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Francescate the COTC (Sustainable Production Population Populat
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Davis	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dawn	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "secluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "secluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dawn	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dawn	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			D. excluding social means users an oreators and meir content from regulation',     (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerns that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambininusly, so we don't here acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dawne	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dawson	B	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned nerson in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Essaino Directions to the OPT (Sustainable and Enablable Development). Development of the OPT (Sustainable and Enablable Development).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dawson	W.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dean	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dean	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dean	w.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dean	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Does to drinke expression, a mile axing you to sowing and enimate tires commitments in the limit version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing ductive anity provisions in a way data imminizes the need or acter algorithms or toroutasing uncertainty;  b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the GRTC is directed to "Or respect adjunctine choice and, where cossible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dean	C.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dear	C	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation",
			c_the)_CNTCI s directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators*; d. and that the CRTCI s directed to "(c)" respect sudjected choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  The contract of the contract
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dean	U.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation y undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
deanna	z.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no natter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Deb	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect auditione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Deb	C.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CNRT is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRRT is directed to 'f'(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Deb	w.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Deb	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulation", and their contents on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "CIP respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Debbie	C	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
הבחחוה

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Debbie	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Debbie	T.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Debbie	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Debbie	U.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "Co(") respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Debbie	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the (RCIK's idirected by Cyl respects applieding schoics and where coasible, increase the oothors available"; d. and that the (RCIK's idirected by Cyl respects applience choics and where coasible in contents available in the contents are contents as a support of the contents are contents and the contents are contents as a content of the contents are contents and contents are contents as a content of the contents are contents as a content of the contents are contents are contents and contents are contents are contents are contents are contents and contents are contents.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for ALL Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Debbie	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Debbie	Z.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft property of the property of the expression I am a saking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version, to ensure that plantal bias is not facilitating these loose and manipulative guidelines for enforcement. To be dear I want full access to all news and content providers so that I can evaluate the information for authenticity given the past few years have provided many government sources and institutions have been focused on providing insummountable miss/disinformation while already suppressing facts including word renowned doctors. Trust of all governments has been denotished and needs to be rebuilty enter providers on confidence that the CRTC has the best interest or will act in the best interest of any Canadians. Current example Pornography allowed on internet when promoted to children but band when videos at printed events is posted. This is not how you protect children on the internet but promotes harm to them. In short clean up your house before taking the fake moral ground to tell me what I can access. Please review and consider the points below, as further severies on of freedom or speech and access will not achieve your intended outcome and if full communist control is the underlying goal, God help us all as Canadians will not sit back.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Debbie	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and or "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks dainty on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambibuously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Deborah	G.	Ontario	As a concerned necros in Canada. Law submitting my commonte on the Order Insulan Directions to the CPT (Surtainable and Equilibrial Developation Deputation Deputation Developation Deputation Deputation Community.) While I approximate the destination of the CPT (Surtainable and Equilibrial Developation Deputation Developation Dev
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c  the  "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Deborah	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Deborah	М.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a little plant, but may be a little plant of the plant
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Deborah	F.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Deborah	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provision in a way that minimize the used to a large lowly undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Deborah	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Section 1.				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
Service of the control of the contro				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to everses my stroop support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
Part				<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
For the property of Control services to the control of the property of Control services and the property of Control servic				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
More In Company of the Company of th				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
House, and the control of the contro
The second secon				4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
Hotels, C. Calabara, and the control c
Design 1  The second of the se	Deborah	T.		As a pageomed page of in Canada I am pulmiliting my commonte on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equilibries Commonte on the Commonte on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equilibries Commonte on the Cotton of the COTC (Sustainable and Equilibries Commonte on the COTC (Sustainable and Equilibrie
Property of the control of the contr				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Earlies Communication of the Section				<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".</li> </ul>
Note that the second se				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "that flex RTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  (the respect to the respect to
Service of the servic				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Company   Comp				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose across to those services.
Column   C				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
Solution  Fig. 1  Fig. 1  Fig. 1  Fig. 2  Fig. 2  Fig. 2  Fig. 2  Fig. 2  Fig. 3  Fig. 4  Fig. 3  Fig. 4  Fig.				Trust Canadians to make their own choices!
As a content of service. A content of service. A content of service content on the content for service (Service) and the official service intention (Service) and the official service intention (Service) and the official service). We shall appeal the official special service intention of the serv	Dehorah	D	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
A company department of the option of the company o	Deborun	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Services of the control and control of control of the control of control of the c				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
Part				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulation y on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Part				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
Autority Company   Autority Co
Training with the Rep choices to contact.  The proposed of the season contact with the repetitive of the contact of the contac				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Section 1. Proposed in a contracting section in classes, I am submitting my comments on the Child Laurang Developmen to the Ch				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a command genome in classife, it is without the process of the Coult in support for the lange (Coultained and Equiposition (Coult	Dahasah			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
- The processoring processoring processoring and an antimoter five and or other deportment of the contraction of the contractio	Deborun	J.	Coldinoid	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Presidency and increases and executive contract man regulations and creates and the contract man regulations of a set to the CDTL is defined by regional adjustment to the CDTL increases and a promoting Canadian content and a set of the CDTL increases and a promoting Canadian content and the properties of the contract of				Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
2. 1. In Contractive Characteristics The contractive As in Indicated contract should be regulated, and risks driving and a set of the pulsing direction that can be seen of them.  2. In concrered that people direction below contractives and the problem set of the pulsing direction below contractives and the problem set of them.  3. In concrered that the problem set of the pulsing direction below contractives and the problem set of them.  4. Lastly, 1 uses the induction of a direction to secure that are equal resistant or promotion opportunities created by BB C-11s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian ordinary or all the problems.  1. In the problems of the pulsing direction below contractives and equal resistant of the pulsing direction below contractives. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by BB C-11s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian ordinary or any problems.  2. In the problems of the pulsing direction below contractives and equal resistant ordinary. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by BB C-11s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian ordinary. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by BB C-11s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian ordinary. Any measures are all proposed to contract problems or all the problems of the pulsing direction ordinary. Any measures are all problems or all				b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
1. The concerned that the policy describe back carry on which services should be regulated, and risks driving anal and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of colins undertakings dearly and unembragative, are with the secretable hearth of the control of the policy described by 88 c. 115 implementation must be equally available to all Canadan online creators, no makes the final secretary of the control of the policy described by 88 c. 115 implementation must be equally available to all Canadan online creators, no makes the final secretary of the control of the policy described by 88 c. 115 implementation must be equally available to all Canadan online creators, no makes the final secretary of the policy described by 88 c. 115 implementation must be equally available to address the risks possed to online operations, and address the control results governed to online operations, and address the risks possed to online operations, and online operations, and the results of the policy described by 80 c. 115 implementation must be equally available to address the risks possed to policy of the policy described by 80 c. 115 implementation must be equally available to address the risks policy of the policy described by 80 c. 115 implementation must be equally available to address the risks possed to policy and operation to one control operation operations, and risks possed to policy and operation to one control operation operations of the policy direction has a control of policy and operation operations, and operations of the policy direction has a control of policy and operation operations, and operations of the policy direction and advantage and policy and operation operations, and operation operations operations operations and policy and operation operations, and operations operations and operations operations an				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
4. Lists / 1 year the incisions of describint or exercises.  4. Lists / 1 year the incisions of describint or exercise from the describing of describint or exercise from matter where they object to create.  5. The contraction of the contract
Intro you will taken my feedback that consideration.  Throw you will taken my feedback that consideration.  Throw you will take my feedback that consideration.  As a concerned quarter in Cardial, I am a sampling my comments in the Chief Interior Science (Chief Chastisnoble and Capitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the make the control of the Chief Chief Chastisnoble and Capitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the make the control of the Chief				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
dotra    Contain				matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Equating Development in the CRITC (Substanable and Equalible Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks  I restrict, I result die to express my straining support for the filtering guidance in the policy direction and the content from regulatory.  In restriction second and an analysis of the CRITC (Substanable and Equation of the CRITC (Substanable and Equation and E	dehra	L	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very thet minimises the need to after algorithms of broadcasting of programs of contracting of the policy direction rules out across the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and applicant to users like me, and any CRTC effected changes to flow mining algorithms work should let me droace whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the good privater industric canadian content should be repulsable, and make droving and an area of the contracting of the policy direction in the contracting of the policy of the contraction of the policy direction of the policy direction of the contracting of the policy of the policy direction of the policy direct				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
c. (the*) CRIC is derected not to impose regulatory regularments on online underfactings in respect of programs of accid media creators*;  d. this but the CRTC is derected not to impose regulatory regularments on online underfactings in respect of programs of accid media creators*;  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual doice and expression, is, is crucial that the final version of the policy derection rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the content and the programs of the policy derection rules of across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be regulated, and raise driving small and nice foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online underfakings clearly and understance when they give here drives they give the services.  4. Learly, trung the indication of a direction is searched. Any should be regulated, and raise driving small and nice foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online underfakings clearly and understance when they give the content of the con				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. To further prinception these commentaries to individual cricks and expression. It is most that the find version of the pulsey direction rates not access the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be colorated and content should be content on the pulsey direction in the colorate and content should be content on the pulsey direction and content should be required.  3. I'm concerned that the policy demotion lacks starty or which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canadia. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and interest the product of the content.  4. Lestly, I grip the inclusion of a direction to current and adequal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter entering closure in the content of the				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. This concerned that the policy direction lacks clarky on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the indusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they closed to onlines organized. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to onlines organized. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to onlines organized. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction in the Policy direction.  1. Firstly, I model list to express my strong support for the following pullation in the policy direction.  2. Firstly, I model list to express my strong support for the following pullation in the policy direction.  3. Firstly, I model list to express my strong support for the following pullation of the policy direction.  4. Firstly, I model list to express my strong support for the following pullation in the policy direction.  5. Firstly, I model list to express my strong support for the following pullation of the policy direction rules or across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content and the observation of the policy direction rules or across the board algorithm alteration must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and undertaking scope and content for an equal treatment for all Ca				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to content.  Debra H. Octatio  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidily and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I nould like the superses my storegulatory requirements on conferent deviations in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of the policy direction.  2. The firstly of the canadian online creators in a submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the control of the policy direction in the canadian online creators of the control of the policy direction in the canadian online creators of the policy direction in the canadian online creators of the policy direction in the canadian online creators of the policy direction in the canadian online creators of the policy direction in the canadian online creators of the policy direction in the canadian online creators of the policy direction in the canadian online creators of the canadian online				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Debra H. Ontario  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Debra H. Ontario  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Debra H. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expension, and an advantage of the control of Debra H. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I sound labe to express my streng support for the final version.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial with the final version.  3. The concerned preson in Canada, I am submitting my comments on online undertakings in respect of programs as foscial media users and rectors and white-context from regulatories.  4. Lastly, I complete the context in the final version.  5. The concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings in unambiguously, so we don't bear excess to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  5. Firstly, I used the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  5. Firstly, I umplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  5. Producing social media users and repression in the policy direction:  6. I firstly you will take				matter where they choose to create.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express and creators and their content from regulation;  2. The further strengthen these commitments in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;  3. The further strengthen these commitments in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;  4. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Firstly, I used the consideration.  2. The further strengthen the expression, it is a sixty journal to the consideration.  3. I'm concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  3. Firstly, I used like to expression, a masking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the	Debra	н.	Ontario
a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a later algorithms of broadcasting undertatings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC is directed to "(c) respect addisince rhoice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIT-directed changes to how online disporting works in the content of the conten
c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(or pescet audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how all algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Debra  R. Alberta  Debra  R. Alberta  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction is the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizer in the policy direction is controlled to "(or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  a. "In the commenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizer on online undertakings in respect of programs of socia				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction locks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Debra  R. Alberta  Alberta  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firely I, lowed like to express my strong upport for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Firely I, lowed like to express my strong upport for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. Firely I, lowed like to express my strong upport for the following guidance in the policy direction in the guidance of the policy direction of the policy direction of the policy direction and the care of the comment of the policy direction and the care of the comment of the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction is an advan				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks danty on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Debra R. Alberta  Alberta  Alberta  Pebra A so concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all growthms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to 10 impose regulatory regurements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 10 impose regulatory regurements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 10 impose regulatory regurements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media acreators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 10 impose regulatory regurements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media acreators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 10 impose regulatory regurements on online undertakings in respect of progr				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Alberta  Albert
matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Debra R. Alberta  A so concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available", 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction locid cardity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aberta  A Aberta  A Aberta  A berta  A a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possible personal p				matter where they choose to create.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to taker algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible and where possible and to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction locks drafty on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.	Debra	R.	Alberta
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearcators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  British				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  British				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
British				matter where they choose to create.
	Debra	N.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my readoack into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
debra	a.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation", social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Debra	w.	British Columbia	Canadians have had enough, more than enough.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
dee	F.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dee	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; good and their content from regulation is a content of the regulation in the regulation is a content of the regulation in the regulation is a content of the regul
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Deidre	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; ground the content of the content of the content from the content fr
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Del	F.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Del	М.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CMTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CMTC is directed to '(') (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Del	м.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dei	141.		As a concerned person in Canada, I among the many comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to nonline expression, I am anique you so solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be secrees to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Della	w.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  There have all they choose to create.
Delmar	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Delmar	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Deme	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			I am against censorship of any kind. The majority of our society is in my opinion good and decent and of sound mind enough so they can distinguish the difference between a truthful publication and a less than truthful publication. I do not at all appreciate any level of government leveraging the negative impact that an extreme minority will attempt to impose on the rest of our society to create an atmosphere of censorship and that big brother is watching over us. I do not wish to live in a country that is ruled by a tyrant.
Demetrios	P.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Newfoundlan	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Denis	В.	d and Labrador

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Denis	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	-	0.1. 1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Denis	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] *CRTs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Denis	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Denis	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soils media users and creators and whele content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
DENIS	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to action of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to action of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to action of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Denise	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
-c3e		Ontallo	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Denise	В.	Alberta

			As a concepted agree in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Ignation to the CPTC (Sustainable and Savidable Residual Savidable Residu
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c_[bis] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d, and that the CRTC is directed to (fc) respect suddirect ochica end, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any UKI L-directed changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Denise	F.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dellise		Albeita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ flet) "CRTL's directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Denise	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chosely whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			naute where usey under our beaute of the consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Denni-Jo	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	C.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC 15 directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC 15 directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dennis	E.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Delillis	r.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be resultated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators," [1.1] It is defined as users and creators and their content from regulators, [2.1] It is defined as of the impose regulatory requirements from incline understaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [2.1] VEX.TEX. It is described not to impose regulatory requirements from incline understaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [2.2] It is described not to impose regulatory requirements from incline understaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [3.2] It is described not to impose regulatory requirements from incline understainings in the impose regulatory requirements from the impose regulatory requirements from the impose regulatory requirements of the im
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	G.	Alberta

			As a concepted person in Canada. Lam submitting my composition to the Order Israina Disortions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Establish Residential Resi
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	S.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dennis	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	F.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	w.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	w.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			<ul> <li>excluding social means users an are records and metr content from regulation',</li> <li>c. Ethe j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concent that the policy direction lack starting on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiouously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	F.	Ontario

			This note is a submition of my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			This note is a submition of my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While I appreciate the draft policy attempts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			where appreciate the unit power personal sources the index poses of the massing you do soluting and entained these committees an use limit version.  1.1 would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. the CRTC is directed to "not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. the CRTC is directed to "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			d. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. For further surface, these continues of instructions of the surface of the sur
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the 'CRTC' is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and h" CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and h" CRTC is directed by "c) ("respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			5. IT following that that the place yellow account lacks during or minut services strough or regulated, and note or minute the place of
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dennis	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Denny	к.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. For further surface, these continues of instructions of the surface of the sur
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't to see access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			mater where user close to deate.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Derek	N.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Derek	w.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me close whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Derek	0.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [.the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grige the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			A VOA 700 min wite my recorded into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Derek	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discovability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Derek	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. Lasty, tage the inclusion of a unicution to ensure rain and equal deathers to an canadian online deaths. Any invalidation of pronoution upportunities deated by an C-11s implementation must be equally available to an canadian online deaths, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Derek	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Derek	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation",  C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Derek	J.	British Columbia	Hate speech protects the hater as it teaches the hayer what not to say so they can hide how they feel about themselves yes you heard me right how they feel about themselves as its themselves they are talking about not the one they happen to be
			nated special products to the lated as It teaches the lated with the lated as It teaches the lated with the lated as It teaches the lated with the lated as It teaches as It teaches as It teaches as It teaches the lated with the lated as It teaches as It
Des. 1	w	0-4	better versions of themselves. C-11 kust is another means of hiding hatred ot doesn't stop it from being present and this hiding it ends up being worst of both fir the hater and hatred as neother of them end up learning to work on themselves to overcome the feeling and over time the tyrant that one hopes to avoid cominat op owner in reality does as a theres now a law that protect them. All tyrants implement hate speech laws and policies as a means to suppress their opposition to their control
Derek	W.	Ontario	and power. C-11 will actually have the opposite effect than is intended.  Consultation? Why bother asking the public their opinion after the ram has touched the wall?
Derrick	т.	Ontario	No. My recommendation is to do nothing. Clap for the Liberals for having passed a law. Then you do nothing until a future generation finally comes along to break everything Society has done to them.
Dellick	1.	Jillario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Derrick	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Des	C.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Desha	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Desiree	L.	Quebec	I can choose my own content, thank-you. As a very proud Canadian, I would a choose Canadian content first, but if I want to check out something else, that should be my right in a free country like Canada.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me towes whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Desiree	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Desmond		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCRTC is directed by "Cy respect audience choice and where oossible, increase the options available".
			a. and that the LNIL is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available:  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dev	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and retards and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't best excess to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Devi	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dhannie	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to included choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dhanya	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I widual nite or expliess in systian support to the inclinating support to the role inclinating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. Ithel "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dharamendr		Northwest Territories	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
a	K.	and Nunavut	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy indicates the services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dian	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Diana	D.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C!" essect adulgationer choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ul> <li>a. an ontar the LXIL is directed to "(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase me options available:</li> <li>2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ul>
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diana	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerning resonant malanar, I am a making you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (_thei   "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Diana	_	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diana	Р.	Ontario
			As an extremely concerned person in Cranada, I am submitting my comments on the (C-11) Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions's efforts to address the specific policy of the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions's efforts to address the specific policy of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions's efforts to address the specific policy of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions's efforts to address the specific policy of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions's efforts to address the specific policy of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my very strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes he need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation" — this is extremely important, c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". Please stop trying to handcuff content creators in Canada.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction RULES OUT across-the-board algorithm alteration ENTIRELY. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content
			should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. THIS IS UNACCEPTABLE in Canada's Free Society! The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. I need them for my quality of life!
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into strong consideration.
Diana	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insite where only those to deate.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diana	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "expression of the content from regulation"; d. "d. "expression of the content from regulation"; expression of the content from the content from regulation of the content from regulatio
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Diana	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to suppress my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjornthms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c] (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diane	G.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diane	т.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRIC's id directed by "c) ("respect audience choice and, where possible, in crease the options available"; d. and that the CRIC's id directed by "c) ("respect audience choice and, where possible, in crease the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dia	L.	Onterio	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diane	H.	Ontario

			As a concerned operate in Chanda I am submitted my comments on the Order Israino Directions to the CBT (Sushinghlo and Finish). Providence in Chanda I am submitted my comments on the Order Israino Directions to the CBT (Sushinghlo and Finish).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diane	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing duscreaming provision in a way dust imministed sure less to desire algorithms or trobustating up to the content from regulation."  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation."  c. [the] CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators."  d. and 'LNTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulation reputation in respect of programs of social media creators."  d. and 'LNTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulation carboic and where possible, increase the options available."  d. d. d. "CNTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulation carboic choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diane	R.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diane	V.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diane Marie	C.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
D:-			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dianna	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTL is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTL is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and unlet the CVR LS unletted to (C) respect adjusting include any, where pussions, inclease the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dianne	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerning person in calcular, I am automating in your internal and the concerning a
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reputation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dian		Alband	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		B 22.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dianne	0.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diego	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dieter	s.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
dietmar	r.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			While I acknowledge that the wording of my request has been provided by Open Media, who have the knowledge and experience to express the concerns and nuances regarding the policy directions relating to bill Bill C-11 much better than I ever could, I fully share these concerns, and appreciate this opportunity to voice my support to have them heard and taken into consideration in the final wording of the policy direction document.
Dietrich	В.	Ontario	With many thanks, Dietrich B.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dillan	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Doesd to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dillon	P.	Ontario

			As a concerned nesson in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the OTT (Sustainable and Equilability Residential Directions and the Control of the Contro
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dillon	F.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dimitrios	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Cithel "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dina	Р.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dino	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [te] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dion	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Newfoundlan	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dionne	E.	d and Labrador
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dior	li .	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			The Government is supposed to work for the People, not the other way around.
			not the other way around.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
dirk	k.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. This y, "Avoid line to explies my sturing support to the following suddents in the gloricy function."  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation from regulation."  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation."  c. (the) "CRTC idented not to impose regulatory equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  c. (etc.) "CRTC idented not to impose regulatory equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dixie	H.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Dixie	R.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way btate minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dmitry	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Do	R.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and 5.1 Introducting that the policy unecution is access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dolores	T.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			natter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dolores	P.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unaninguousy, so we unit tope access to these services.  A Lastly, I upper the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
dominic	f.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed concerned severession, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes he need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [ the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dominic	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dominique	P.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Don	н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "O' (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Don	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	Ĭ.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id induced in users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id induced not in limpose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Don	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
2011	J.	Jinua 10	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in section in the model of after algorithms of the model of after algorithms of the production of the provision o
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Don	М.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			to. Excluding social metale users and retained and retained in regulation;  (E the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Don	E.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
don	h.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Don	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Don	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Don	P.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. the "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Don	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned citizen in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Don	S.	Columbia

			As a concerned operan in Canada. Lam culturalities museumments on the Arder Irruina Nicotions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Freinbild Readanting Residuals Residual Residuals Residuals Residuals Residuals Residuals Residuals Res
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	S.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "Implications" particularly protections by reliable to the way four manifestor exclusions and considerable to the considerable of the considera
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choics and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	G.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. In say, 1 whole like to explais my support to the incoming globalist in the planty traction.  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. Ithel "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator venuirements on noine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Donald	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donaid	PI.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Donald	К.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," regulation," regulation, "record to a social media users and creators and their content from regulation," retaining the regulation, and the results of the results of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "Cir respect, adulgatinger, chicke and, where possible, increase the cottons available," and that the CRCT is directed to "Cir respect, adulgatinger, chicke and, which express the cottons available," and the content of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audionece robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	c	Alborta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Concentration of Lindan, a lasting you to solidify and enhance these commitments on the UK.L Courtainable and equiration processing, lasting you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to t'ci propse regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lastyl, Jurge the inclusion or at airction to ensure tair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no mathematical inclusion or at a contract of the
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	v.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [bit] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Donald	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "melplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be for optional to users the measures in the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be for optional to users the measures of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be for optional to use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, one don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insute where they choose of Least.  5. I'm also concerned that doing bits could prompt google/YouTube to shut down services in Canada, which would be disastrous.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	М.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. Don K.
Donald	К.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the fucking thing. Get rid of it completely.
Donald	К.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the fucking thing. Get rid of it completely Get rid of it completely Get rid of it completely Mayone that voted thin Bill will do. Mayone that voted thin Bill in is a COMMUNIST TRAITOR! And they deserve everything they got coming to them. This is a FREC country and the Internet has worked fine this whole time.
Donald	K.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the fucking thing. Get rid of it completely. Notting short of scrapping this Bill will do. Not thing short of scrapping this Bill will do. Not the scrapping this Bill will do. Not scrapping this Bill will do. No
Donald	К.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the ficking thing. Gist lid if it completely. Nothing short of scrapping this Bill will do. Anyone that voted this Bill will do. Anyone that voted this Bill will accounty and the Internet has worked fine this whole time. This is a FREC country and the Internet has worked fine this whole time. The Internet is suppose to be a Global Commerce, such as the Ocean, or Space. I'll take Death over Slavery anythough. To Hades with Trudeau and his Admeration of China's "Basic Dictatorship" and their Great Firewall, which is basically Bill C-11 on steroids.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Donald	К.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the fucking thing. Get rid of it completely. Anyone that voted this Bill will do. Anyone that voted this Bill in is a COMMUNIST TRAITOR! And they deserve everything they got coming to them. This is a FREC country and the Internet has worked fine this whole time. The Internet is suppose to be a Global Commerce, such as the Ocean, or Space. I'll take Death over Slavery anyolid. To Hades with Trudeau and his Admeration of China's "Basic Dictatorship" and their Great Firewall, which is basically Bill C-11 on steroids.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRITC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Donald	K.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the fixeding thing. Gist hid if it completely. Nothing short of scrapping this Bill will do. Anyone that voted this Bill in is a COMMUNIST TRATTOR! And they deserve everything they got coming to them. This is a FREC Country and the Internet has worked fine this whole time. The Internet is suppose to be a Global Commerce, such as the Ocean, or Space. Il take Death over Slavery anyone to be a Global Commerce, such as the Ocean, or Space. Il take Death over Slavery anyone of Sharper of Sharper of Commerce, such as the Ocean, or Space. Il take Death over Slavery anyone of Sharper of Sharp
Donald	К.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the fucking thing. Get rid of it completely. Get rid of it completely for the service of the completely form the service of the
Donald	К.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the fucking thing. Get rid of it completely. Nothing short of scrapping this Bill will do. Nothing short of scrapping this Bill will be short of scrapping this Bil
Donald	к.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the floriding thing, Set and it compelled. Set plant floriding thing, Set and it compelled. Set plant floriding thing set and it compelled. Set plant floriding thing set and it compelled. Set plant floriding thing set plant floriding thing set plant floriding thing set plant floriding thing set plant floriding thing.  The Internet is suppose to be a Global Commerence, such as the Ocean, or Space. It lake Death over Slavery anylong the set plant floriding thing set plant floriding thing set plant floriding thing. To Hades with Trudeau and his Admeration of China's "Basic Dictatorship" and their Great Firewall, which is basically Bill C-11 on steroids.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Firstly, I sould like to express my strong apport for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a mylenmethol discoverability provision in a leavy that minimizes the reset or a late algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and cr
Donald	к.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the fricting thing. Get rid it completely. Nothing short of srapping this Bill will do. Anyone that voted this Bill in is a COMMUNIST TRATTOR! And they deserve everything they got coming to them. This is a FREC country and the Internet has worked fine this whole time. The Internet is suppose to be a Global Commerce, such as the Ocean, or Space. It like Death over Slavery anything the over Slavery anything the over Slavery anything. To Hades with Trudeau and his Admeration of China's "Basic Dictatorship" and their Great Firewall, which is basically Bill C-11 on steroids. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed and to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users whether to make whether to make whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of on
Donald	K.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the fucking thing. Get nd of it completely. Get nd of it
Donald	К.	Ontario	Don K.  Scrap the fricking thing. Get ind it completely. Nothing short of srapping this Bill will do. Anyone that voted this Bill in is a COMMUNIST TRATTOR! And they deserve everything they got coming to them. This is a FREC country and the Internet has worked fine this whole time. The Internet is suppose to be a Global Commerce, such as the Ocean, or Space. I'll take Death over Slavery anything the over Slavery anything the over Slavery anything. To Hades with Trudeau and his Admention of China's "Basic Dictatorship" and their Great Firewall, which is basically Bill C-11 on steroids. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and creators and view processing and the programs of social media users and creators and creators and view processing and creators and creators and view processing and view processing and the programs of social media users and creators and view provision in a way that minimi
			Scrap the fucking thing. Get rid of it completely. Get rid of it completely. Get rid of it completely.  Anyone that voted this Bill will do. Anyone that voted this Bill will do. Anyone that voted this Bill will do. Anyone that voted this Bill will accountly and the Internet has worked fine this whole time. The Internet is suppose to be a Global Commerce, such as the Ocean, or Space. I'll take Death over Slavery anyone. I'll take Death over Slavery any

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenathen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
DONALD	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable "Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Donald	K.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes he need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the 1\CRICE is directed not to impose resulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; C. [the 1\CRICE is directed not to impose resulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To Cuther strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Donn	T.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to drime expression, I am asking you do solonly and eminited trase unintendent in man version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverations provisions in a way dust imminizes the need of after adjointnins to understandings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy ("expect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	В.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b.  Cauduling social media users and reactors and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Donna	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Donna	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Donna	S.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
DUIIIB	э.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Implicitioning uscord reading provision in a way due, minimizes use need to deter agold uniting to determine the provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	Α.	Alberta	ג נוטגי איט אווו נסגב וווץ וכפטוסג. ווונט באואטערופטערו.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chowhether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Donna	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (E) (Te) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Listing Light per lincilision of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and opcoring under the time place of the control of t
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression. It is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. Thank you
Donna	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Donna	М.	Manitoba	Censorship in any form is not conducive to a democracy. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content show be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chewher to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donna	0.	British Columbia
			As a concerned Canadian, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "TRIC's directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		D. 2011	I trust that you will take my feedback into consideration. Thank you.
	Α.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Donnie	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRT cs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT cs directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
dorde	b.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
dorde	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doreen	G.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doreen	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dorothea	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to notifine expression. I am acking you be called a proper of the commitments in the final varying posed to online expression, I am asking you to solutiny and eminate these communitients in the milet version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dorothy	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory regularements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dorothy	Z.	n saskatchewa

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c_[the] "CRTC is directed not be impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d, and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect uniquence choice and, where possible, increase the options availables".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dorothy	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dorodry	Б.	Coldilibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks proposed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ flet) "CRTL's directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dorothy	J.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the foal version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be for the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be for the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be for the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be for the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be found to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be found to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be found to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be found to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dorreen	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	G.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to draine expression; and asking you disclosury and eliminate drain drain vesion.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose scenes to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no mater where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding sorial media users and reastors, and their content from regulations".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	В.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			C. Exactioning social means and real control in the space of the state of the stat
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Doug	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	111.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation y equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
doug	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC: is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy  respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evoluntary and optional to user sisk em and any CKTC-directed changes to how online alorations work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Doug	c.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguouslys, so we don't hose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Turge the Industion of a direction to ensure fair and equal breatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they created they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	P.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "In the proper of the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRC-directed changes to how online alorations work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
doug	k.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei "CRTIC is directed not to impose resultator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	S.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT's directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Doug	R.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug		Pilotitu	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastby, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Doug	D.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
DOUG	К.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to collect properties. I am action you to collection to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. Bits under the CARC is unextend to (C) respect adulence form, where possible, increase the options are assumed as the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	F.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter values to the production of the production
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	s.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Doug	м.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	w.	Alberta	Hello,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Doug	Α.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Douglas	K.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Douglas	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. excluding Social meta-base had used social regulation (; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Douglas	C.	Manitoba

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Davidas	N.	Manitoha	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Douglas	14.	Hariicoba	As a oncerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhancer these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Douglas	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Douglas	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>invadualing social media users and creators and helir content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms awore, should let me chave whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Douglas	R.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>invadualing social media users and creators and helir content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me charge whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Douglas	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect outlendere choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Douglas	Α.	British Columbia
Douglas	М.	Ontario	What is the benefit of free speech if the government that protects monopolies takes charge of who can listen. I see this as the first disparate step to protect our entrenched bureaucrats but it will doom our society.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			1. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dov	B.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, we are submitting our comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While we appreciate the L, posed to online expression, we are asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, we would like to express our strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>ineplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>inequal management of the provision of the</li></ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and 1"CRTC is directed to (v) respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available"; d. the control of the contro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like us, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let us chewhether to make use of them.
			3. We are concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, we urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  We trust you will take our feedback into consideration.
Doyle & Lori	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version to target only hate, bigotry and falsehood without a prejudice.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and inche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. Only hate, bightypt and falsebrood should be targeted without a prayed without a provide.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dr K	Α.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dr Paul	S.	British Columbia
			Dear Ms. Eatrides,  Having lived in this beautiful, free, country for the past 19 years (10 as Canadian citizens) we feel duty bound to submit some comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			Whilst we appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, we are asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, we would like to express our strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ul>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, we feel it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like us and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let us choose whether to make use of them.
			3. We are concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, we urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators,
Dr. Alex and			no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take our feedback into consideration.
Mrs. Charlotte	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
D- 5 *:	7	Alba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dr. Debi	Z.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and retards and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dr. Dmitri	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dray	В.	Alberta

			As a concerned normal in Charles I am submitted my commonly on the Order Insulant Dissolitors to the CRIT (Surfainshle and Facilitation Providence Insulant
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that innimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Drew	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discureability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding osical media users and creators and their content from regulation", osical media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Duane	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Duane	V	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Duane	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRT Lis directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Duane	0.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Duncan	М.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Duncan	S.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Juncell	٥.	Albei (d	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dunn	u .	Ontonia	a uses you mit usee my required into unisoter dutil.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Durrell	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dustin	м.	Newfoundlan d and Labrador	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dustin	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from the provisions of the social media users and creators and their content from the social media users and creators and their content from the social media users are social media users."
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dustin	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dustin	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Newfoundlan d and	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dwayne	н.	Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Davies 11			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dwayne	S.	Ontario

			As a concerned nerson in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the COTE (Sushaishble and Equilable) Residential Department of the COTE (Sushaishble and Equilable and
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dwayne	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dwayne	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (thei "CREC is directed not to impose regulator you requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dwayne	C.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dilayiic			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Prince Edward	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dylan	В.	Island	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I will like to express my strong support for the following cladence in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. 2507, Tulge the included to a institution to an extension of a institution to a instituti
Dylan	T.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable to the social media users and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable to the social media users and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable to the social media users and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable to the social media users and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable to the social media users and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable to the social media users and the social media creators."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final residual tender and expression, it is crucial that the final residual tender and expression and the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy in the cares to these services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Date in the	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dylan	М.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Implications good media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] 'CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adultance choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. an unit une CNT is directed to (c) respect adjusting include and, where pussions, inclease one oputions available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dulan		British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
E	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC: is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
e	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following auidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bee access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
E.	G.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"  [c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the RCTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			5.: In Content of the Unit the Unit the Unit the Unit of the Unit
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
E. Gail	Н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A. Lastyl, I upe the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
E. Wyn	R.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [It is a content of the content from regulation on the content from regulation on the content from respect of programs of social media creators"; [It is a content of the content of the content from regulation or the content from
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Earl	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "svrluting social media users and treators and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiouously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grig the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing social media and set and vectors and trial control in the control in
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Farl	G.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Earle	P.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laile	r.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ebert	L	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ecaterina	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ed	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Does do no line expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ed	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei "CRIS is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ed	S.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the "CRTC is directed to "Cyl respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			<ol> <li>Lists(), Lirgs the inclusion of a inerction to ensure rair and equal treatment for all clanadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by bill C-11 s implementation must be equally available to all clanadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.</li> </ol>
	В.		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ed	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulation y on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ed	Q.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me change whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
ed	0.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version is the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me tows whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ed and Jan	J.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Edda	L	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luua		Albeitd	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks drivino small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eddie	Α.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eddie	Α.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eden	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy! respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Edith	T.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Edward	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a vary that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b.  - excluding sold media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. If the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from requisition",  c. If the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and respect to the content of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Edward	F.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
edward	m.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			1. In Concerned ones, the points proceeding and makes centry of minimal services another personal
			matter where they choose to create.
Edward	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choicy sweether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Edward	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously. so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Edward	J.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Edward	R.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			to. Excluding social metical bases and useful control and used control and used to the control and use
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Edward	K.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		British	The above letter is way too polite; The bloody law should never have seen the light of day . The Black Face /NDP government has their mind set and nothing we say means anything to them . This is a power grab plain & simple .
Edward	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restroors and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Edward A	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ed abo	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Edythe	C.	Jiitaill	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs disdicated not impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Efrem	٧.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eggert	L.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Egon	к.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Excluding Stoam leads and Lead with non-registration from registration from regis
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ehsan	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. The production of the produ
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elaine	Υ.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elaine	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Elaine	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC 15 directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Elaine	м.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	2.00	100

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the baard algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elaine	C.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elaine	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Elaine	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTIc is directed on the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Please take my feedback into consideration. The words above, although written by someone else, express exactly what I am thinking, what my concerns are. I am very worried about the erosion of the choices that we Canadian citizens are experiencing. The freedoms we have (had, in many cases) are being chipped away at and we are being muzzled in many situations—I know many people who are terrified of what our country is becoming, of how much we are not allowed to say and do. Freedom of speech is everything—if we are to have any hope of restoring Canada to what it was not so long ago, we have to be free to receive and share any and all information with virtually no restrictions.
Elaine	В.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I know as decision makers your task is difficult so please take the advice of well meaning Canadians like myself.
Elaine	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LIGHT	150	o mario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS its directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Elaine	V.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	ľ		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Minimize the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "exclude social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. Do not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. Direct the CRTC to respect audience choice and increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
L.			Thank you
Elaine	W.	Alberta

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to aller algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elbert	T.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Canada prides itself on being a democratic country that preserves and respects freedom of thought and speech for all. That includes the freedom to avail oneself of digital content on intermet platforms from all sources. Canadians have the right to choose which service they access as well as opt out of any services they choose at will.  CHOICE is the operative language here.
			Freedom of choice must be preserved.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eleanor	S.	Yukon	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elena	G.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possess asking you to solidify and enhance these commissions in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Elisabeth	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Liisabetti	11.	Coldifibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elisabeth	V.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To turther strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elise	R.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Elissa	1.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations, from regulations, continued to the content from regulations or social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory regularements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elizabeth	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Elizabeth	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Liizabetii		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CNT Ls directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Elizabeth	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from requisition"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from requisition";
			c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elizabeth	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		L	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elizabeth	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Elizabeth	В.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearbox and their content form requisition".
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c.(telp. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elizabeth	J.	Saskatchewa n

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [ the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elizabeth	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and potional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be to whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elizabeth	0.	British Columbia	a trust you will take my recuracy into Consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version is the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] *CRTs id intexted not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elizabeth	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to Impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of sould media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Elizabeth	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Liizabetii		Coldilibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing uscoverations y provisions in a way dust imminizes are need to after adjoint into incade and under acting in the content from a final provision and their content from explaition",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from the content fr
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't to see access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elizabeth	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Chiefelp person, in Calebay, a fair Caleb
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elizabeth	U.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elizabeth	М.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I admire the research and enge therefore endorse their recommendations below.
			1. Firstly, Open Media strongly supports the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] C'RTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(') crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutionary and optional to users it is me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choicy whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take all responses from ordinary Canadians into consideration.
Elizabeth	N.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ellen	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
ellie	L	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sold imedia users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulator y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audique choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Filiot	P.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elsa	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (c, the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elsie	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNRT is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed to "CJC respect audionice choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elyssa	м.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unaminguousy, so we unit tobe access to these services.  A Lasty, I upe the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Elyza	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I asking submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pose on continuous expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't hose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
emil	f.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Emile	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c thei] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [c thei] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Emilia	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [c [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Emilie	М.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatiory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
emilie	P.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Emily	H.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and instruction of the Confereince person in Carladoa, it and it is a confereince person in Carladoa, it and it is a confereince person in Carladoa, it is a confereince
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implemention discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alteral applications of the policy directions of the policy d
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained by the policy direction rules of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, Lirgo the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
57		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Emily	V.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to online expression, i and asking you to soliding and emilance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastry, lurge the inclusion of a direction censure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no mater expenses of the production of the control of the control of the control opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no material opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no material opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no material opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no material opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no material opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no material opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no material opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no material opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no material opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Emma	В.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Coline layer proving the called a first training in the control of the called and the called a ca
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings" - eliminate it completely, government has no right in altering a citizens right to consume the content they want;
			b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators" d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and that the CRYC's direction of (c) respect administration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To Variety and optional loss consistence, and any CRTC-direct changes to have been adjusted to the place of the place o
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity and specifications on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings delarly and unambiguously, so we don't loss access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I do not trust the CRTC to take may feedback into consideration due to the fact that I have been fighting a long time for a more affordable way to connect to the internet and other ways of communication, it has all failed and the government just does Emmanuel	V.	Ontario	what it wants to do in the best interest of big companies like Bell, Rogers, Telus et.al., regardless of the numerous complaints by citizens. These public consultations are just a way for the CRTC to say "we asked people and this is what they said".  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			us and use the Current and Control of the Control o
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter by first produce of the production of Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Engelina	v.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pose to tendine expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing ductive analy provisions in a way that imminizes the need or aret algorithms or oroalizating undertakings; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutinary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unamonguously, so we ont tiose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Enid	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Sirethy, I would like to express my choose support for the following quickness in the policy direction:
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. exclusing social metal uses and it extent norm regulation. The control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3. I'm content that the politive direction lacks dearly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, dearly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, and the politic services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously and the politic services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously described and the politic services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously described and the politic services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking scope of the politic services of the pol
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no meter choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ennio	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concentration and a state of the state
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "imbeymention discoverability rovisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter alexanders undertakings":
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (tel) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained by the policy direction rules of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm encement that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and undertakings of the properties o
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  The transmitted in the confidential in the confid Ennio	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
-

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			- (A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Enrica	V.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Esta	C.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ETIC		NOVA SCOUA	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
eric	b.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eric	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Eric	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
EIIC	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eric	v.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eric	C.	Ontario

			As a second of the second of t
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRT is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eric	a.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CKIC is directed not to impose regulator prequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			C. Liver Unit as United by the Company of the Compa
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it kiem en, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, one don't lose access to these services.
			inaction while Lines (Lines to Lieux).  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eric	s.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
L.		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eric	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction censure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no managery functions of created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no managery functions of created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no managery functions of created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no managery functions of created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no managery functions of created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no managery functions of created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no managery functions of created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no managery functions of created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, and the created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, and the created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eric	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", see the content of the content from regulation of the regulation
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it kiem en, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, o we don't lose services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ERIC	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. exclusing social metals uses and clearon's and tried control and tried the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Fric	R.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am anximity out to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation y content so on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  e. CRTC shouldn't police the internet. The police or other regulated surveillance bodies should be the one doing it but only if an illegal activity has been reported and that a warrant is given;
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Fric	D.	Ouebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "decluding social media users and dreators and their content from regulation";     c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Eric	c.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [ the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Eric	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eric	V.	Ontario	I am a Canadian citizen concerned with Bill C-11.
			I will start with commenting on specific quotes from gazette.gc.ca on policy direction:
			'Ensuring the meaningful participation of Indigenous persons in the broadcasting system;' really? Indigenous people know how to use the internet. They can make as much content as they like and it gathers popularity according the degree and quantity of viewer interest, just like anything else.
			Supporting greater inclusion of equity-seeking groups in the broadcasting system; — The internet never excluded anyone. That's the beauty of it. What does supporting inclusion mean? Social media, Youtube, etc. are equitable beyond the dreams of whoever drafted and passed this bill. Increasing equity in digital content is a bizarre idea. Can you name an underrepresented group, or an equity-seeking group, that doesn't know how to make Youtube videos?
			Implementing discoverability requirements in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings and that, where possible, increases choice for users; How are you going to do that? How are you going to 'increase choice? That doesn't even make sense.
			Now I will make two general comments.
			Firstly there is no need to protect Canadian content since Canadians are talented enough to produce content of interest to Canadians and to viewers around the globe.
			Secondly this is a situation where outdated modalities are being applied to a new medium. The internet is simply not the radio, nor is it print or television. The internet has brought a tremendous 'freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression' (to quote section 2.b of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms), which millions of Canadians rely on for entertainment, education and news of their choice, and in many cases for income. They neither need nor benefit from top-down control.
Eric	R.	Alberta	It seems to me that such an overreach by the government into the capacity of its citizens to choose content on their own promotes neither equality nor democracy.
			Hello, Scrap Bill C · 11 entirely.
			Thank You.
Eric	Р.	British Columbia
			Don't mess with my feed or what I content I see. I know better than you, the government, what kind of content I like. This is an issue I feel strongly enough about that the outcome could change my vote.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ERic	Р.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erica	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implanmentage discoverability provisional some post minimizes provided and later algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*; b. recutuling social media users and creators and their content from requisition; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators*;
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Erica	P.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
el icd	r.	ColuiTIDId

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to (c) regards underince choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Erica	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erica	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erica	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction ruise out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erick	J.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Erik	G.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CIIK	G.	Bruitswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erik	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			natter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erik	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding Social medical bases and learned sand urten (content norm regulation).  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erik	c.	Ontario	states you mit use my tectioners must extract the text of the text

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erik	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"miplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erik	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I require that you solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation"; or social media users and creators and their content from requiation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. If you force filter my content, I'll force filter where I spend my money.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	By reading this message, you are legally bound and required to take my feedback into consideration.
Erik	w.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erika	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIS of directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Erin	м.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
E H		Quanec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Erin	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erin	м	British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			es volument ann uponim o dessi ame tine, an dary Curt curves est classinges or now white inspiration to a source the contract of the contract
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Frin		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CIII	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I strongly support the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. The right to individual choice and expression, however, also requires that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			That's our right as Canadian citizens.
			3. I'm deeply concerned that the policy direction is vague on which services would be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erin	Α.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguouslys, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erle	F.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and wheir content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Erna	R.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Insty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol> to. Exacional social menua users and retensions and retension from regulation /  (c) the j "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ernest	Н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ernest	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
E-mail:		Onto :	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ernest	J.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ernest	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation", social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user is like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ernie	R.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ernie and Regina	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, these are my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Direct the CRTC to revise the Cancon rules using an creators-led process to avoid the ridiculous outcomes under the current system.
			2. I strongly support the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. a direction to the CRTC to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			3. Rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			4. The policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			5. Include a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Erwin	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Esther	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Esther	E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			to. Excluding social metable acts and return with regulation, " C [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Esther	z.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "C) erspect and edimence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Esther	v	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Latrier	N.	rialiitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social models users and creators and their content from regulation",  C their CRTs of directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social modes;  C their CRTs of directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social modes;
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Esther	E.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and 1" CRTC is directed to "C) createsct undertake online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and 1" CRTC is directed to "C) createsct undertaken of the createscent
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A Lastly, I give the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Esther	S.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id induced in users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id induced not in limpose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4.1 urg. the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Lastly, that the government recognize the unique ability for online creators and platforms to create community and a sense of belonging in a geographically vast and sparsely populated country like Canada. With isolation and loneliness becoming a challenge in many societies, the online space has provided a unique space for connection and interaction. The government should be appreciating and rewarding creators who promote Canadian knowledge, heritage, and culture. Instead of manipulating algorithms and coercing creators, the government should be working with creators to promote its values, and ideals. Many immigrants use online platforms to gain clarity on Canadian laws, rules, and culture. They use these online platforms to connect with immigrants of the same culture and to learn of other cultures they have come to see and appreciate in Canada. The public enjoys learning and interacting with people of different personalities and not molded in a formal and rigid into a ty journalist. Companies and businesses have recognized the creativity and appeal of using creators to market their products and services which has created an interesting alternative for earning an income for creators and making sales for businesses. As a country Uniphilidas price account properly, the government should not stiffe the growth and the stiff the growth and growth and the growth and the growth and the growth and Esther		Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Estilei	1.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ethan	a.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to 'C) erspect and eighence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ethan	J.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Étienne	В.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect, audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Eugen	м.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lugen	141.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's disdirected not to impose regulation y content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, large the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no match where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eugene	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be revolutary and optional to users it like me, and any CITC directed changes to how online aloughting switch should let me chose.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Eugene	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am assign you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (teh) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eugene	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to dilime expression; I, ain asking you to soliuly and eniance diese commitments in the limal vestion.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; <ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me thought be whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose secress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I ure the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
eugene	d.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Eva	D.	Overhead	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LVO	ь.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eva	Α.	saskatchewa n

			As a concerned operar in Canada. Law submitting my comments on the Arder Irruinan Nicotings to the CRIT (Surphinible and Fright). Residentian Residents - Fright Resi
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", to . Excluding souls include uses and use control and user outner north regulation in the control and user outner north regulation in the control and user outners (c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Evadney	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evaulley	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no mater where they choose to create.
		d and	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evan	P.	Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social mediu users and creators and their content from regulation',
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will ake my feelback into consideration.
Evan	В.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation ",
			c. (the)   "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concered that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evan	D.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Evan	К.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lvaii	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evan	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC 5 directed not to impose requisitor yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		D-8111	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evan	0.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			The policy must include strict and enforceable prohibitions on the promotion or dispromotion of content based on ideology or creator identity.
			I implore you to take my feedback into consideration.
Evan	R.	British Columbia	Hopefully,  Evan Rodwell
LVaii	P.	ColuiTIDId	ETGH HOUTER

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evelyn	В.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sold media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audionect choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evelyn	D.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evelyn	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			ia. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a pheny that minimizes the understanding and adjustment of the provisions in a pheny that minimizes the understanding provisions in a pheny that minimizes the understanding the understanding the understanding the understanding the provisions of broadcasting undertakings;  b. "excluding soodle media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" exspect adjustment concerns online understanding in espect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" exspect adjustment concerns online understanding and underst
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
EVELYN	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			ia. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the indext to all planty in the provisions in a way that minimizes the indext to all plants of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to "C!" conspect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evelyn	S.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC E. directed not to impose regulator requirements on noine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (the) "CRIC E. directed not to impose regulator requirements on noine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Evelyn	P.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed dhanges to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Evelyn	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			Assessment and the second seco
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evelyn	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). As my time is short, my comments will be short. Bill C-11 cannot pass in any way, shape or form, modified or not. It is useless and nefarious. It it essential that bill C-11 does not pass for freedom of choice and freedom of expression.
Evelyne	T.	Quebec	Thank you for taking my comments into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unantinguously, so we unit user access to unservestives.  4. Lastly, I user the incidisor of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Everett	S.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LVCICL	5.	Nova Scotta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction teles out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user is like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Evert	к.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs disdirection to the impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose sceres to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ezio	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the KRTC is directed to (f) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ezra	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Listy): Tuge they choose to create.
T:	V	Onto :	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
F. Tim	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Fadia	V	Ontaria	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the)   CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Fahd	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CNRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed to '(')'(') respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users ilse me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
aith	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
uui	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter by the choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Faiz	J.	Ontario	My Comment:
			The thing is we (Canadian) are now cutting of from world on sharing Canadian views externally so it's we are introducing CCP version of media and broadcasting.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual Choice and expression, it is crucial shart the final version different in class out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be the choose dependent of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			nature winer usey used to teate.  I trust you will sake my feedback into consideration.
FALGUN	Р.	Ontario	Control of the contro
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		d and	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
aq	у.	Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations from regulations (reference to the content from regulations) on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC 5 directed not to impose regulatory regularements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. [ms] 'Unit La Birdection for to implose injustices and under the Control of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
arhaan	н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Farhad	T.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and whele content from requisition";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			d. Exclusing such an unusures and viet measures and viet measures in the equation in (i.e., the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Farhat	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Farrell	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
