			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Rimas	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rinat	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
runde		Coldinoid	As a oncerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Risa	U.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
RISd	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rita		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nica	L.	Coldilibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rita	R.	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rita	K.	Columbia	As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am stating my agreement to the statements on this form letter on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			the "CRTC is directed to to 'incopes regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. The bill should respect our ability to freely choose the content we want.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rita	Р.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. Exhaulting social metale users and return with regulation, "  C. Exhaulting social metale users and return with regulation," and the control of the social media creators of the social media creators of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	S.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ROB	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting underskings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	z.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "secluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, in crease the options available"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, in crease the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	c.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to 'Orl respect adveleges choice and where recossible, increase the oothors available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Rob	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (°C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	L.	Alberta	Lucs, you will care my required, mo Consuler addit.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. "In the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "unglementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a goardman of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from receivable or receiva
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rob	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-hoard algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promotion Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rob	A.	Columbia	The draft policy's Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework) addressing the risks posed to online expression, is an essential first step, but they need to be solidified and enhanced as commitments in the final version.
			1. For example:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulating from regulating in the content from regulating in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. The policy direction doesn't state which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. The policy direction must ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will consider and implement my feedback.
Rob	M.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			De de la contract de la contrac
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Robert	C.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
RODEIT	C.	Nova Scotta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
robert	k.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chave whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	Р.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", to. exclusing social mean users and creators and their content from regulation; CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Robert	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhancer these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRTs id directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be resulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  h. "evaluding origin media users and rearrors and their ronter from requision".  """  """  """  """  """  """  """
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	w.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"mplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			inster whee unity closes to detail. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	т.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the control of the contr
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Robert	I.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available !  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks good to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	w.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Insty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastry, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media tusers and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			and the where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	М.	Ontario	The state of the s

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and help content from regulation".</li> </ol>
			to. Exacioning such means are in the cases and when continuous are the case of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ROBERT	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC: is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	Υ.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	_		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei "CRTIC is directed not to impose resultator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Robert	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy searces to these services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. Ithel "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation "provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. Ithel "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation "provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. Ithel "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation "provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. Ithel "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation "provisions" in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Robert	N.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	T.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", and the state of the state of the state of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRIT is directed to "for respect audiques choice and, where possible, increase the oothors and earlier.  d. and that the CRIT is directed to "for respect audiques choice and, where possible, increase the oothors and earlier."
			a. in unature EXTC is unlected to (C) respect adulence Linux-candy, where passing, increase are oponion animator.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	R.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to essure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robort	c	DaskattiieWa

			As a responsed parson in Canada, Lam submitting my comments on the Order Jesuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developer). While I assemble the defi
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. excluding social media creations and the content from regulation; c. [the] "CRTS directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	c.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Robert	0.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	F.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	K.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [Buth   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and the CRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
robert	0.	British Columbia

			As a concepted person in Canada, I am submitting my composits on the Order Insulan Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Excitable Deciderals Composition Composition and Canada and Cana
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	т.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "expression of the content from regulation"; d. "d. "expression of the content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTC is directed by "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	w.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
robert	m.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "C) crepecte audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Robert	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "Cy (expects audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Robert	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			<ul> <li>excluding social media users an arc reators and metric content from regulation ',</li> <li>c. (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
robert	b.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Contenting person in California, and solution split of the Contenting Person of the Content
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ROBERT	T.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. lipementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulatione: Oxioic and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content
			should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada (which I believe is the intention of the Liberal caucus). The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where / what they choose to create.
			Falling all of this for any reason at all, the bill will need to be abblished outright and prevented from being reconsidered ever again. I would appreciate this leading to the termination and banishment of the entire Liberal caucus; the consequence being that by-elections be held in all season one coucled by this caucus WITH/DOT this party being permitted to field any candidates.
Robert	Р.	Quebec	COLUMN TO A COLUMN
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
robert	t.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a later algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			 Castry Turk the Religion Control of State Country Castro Country Co
Robert		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	L	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual To-choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CITC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chost whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	н.	Ontario
			As a concent person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to entire person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings",
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators",
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction censure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter by the properture of the contraction
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	D.	n

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robert Twic	T.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roberta	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a view that minimizes the need to alter place the provisions in a view that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Newfoundlan	matter where they chosse to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robhen	В.	d and Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;  d. and that the CRIT is different or for respect auditioner, choice and, where possible, proreases the sotions and wallable",  d. and that the CRIT is different or for respect auditioner, choice and, where possible, proreases the sotions and angles.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robin	U.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the): "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, one don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Robin	N.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			Assessment of the second state of the second s
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robin	P.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robin	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robin	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Robin	T.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			. Lastry, tuge the inclusion of a fraction of elsore fail and equal reaction for all calculation in the Ceasis, normatic when the control of promotion opportunities deaded by one of the ceasis of the control of the ceasis, normatic when the control of the ceasis, normatic when the ceasis of the ceasis o
Robin	c.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. excluding social metal users and creators and meir content from regulation /, c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. There should be an ability for a user to be able to voluntarily change content, if they so
			choose, to reflect their own personal values and opinions.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. I would suggest that the only restrictions to content created by the creator be: I) that it does not infringe on the Canadian Constitution or ii) it does not promote hate or violence.
Robin	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulation", equipments on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Robyn	P.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding Social menior bases and useful control in the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roch	S.	Ontario	As a concerned normal in submitting any companies on the Order Leving Directions to the CRT (Sustainable and Equiphela Resolutation Devolutions Framework). While I approximate the destination of the CRT (Sustainable and Equiphela Resolution) and the CRT (Sustai
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media usess and creators and their content from regulation; b. "excluding social media uses and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable to the second s
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roch	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC Es directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rochelle	F.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKIT. is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CKIT. is directed to [C) (respect auditone choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rocky	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Rocky	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3. Thi Concented that the pointy direction into students shall you will be regulated, also risks driving shall also inche loveling services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope or drime uncertakings clearly also unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
rod	w.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		2.2 2000	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rod	C.	Ontario	a usas you mit sake my resultata muo consideratum.

			As a concerned page in Canada, Law submitting my comments on the Order Israino Directions to the CETE (Sushinghlo and Sushinia) Page desired in Canada, Law submitting my comments on the Order Israino Directions to the CETE (Sushinghlo and Sushinia) Page desired in Canada, Law submitting my comments on the Order Israino Directions to the CETE (Sushinghlo and Sushinia) Page desired in Canada, Law submitting my comments on the Order Israino Directions to the CETE (Sushinghlo and Sushinia) Page desired in Canada, Law submitting my comments on the Order Israino Directions to the CETE (Sushinghlo and Sushinia) Page desired in Canada, Law submitting my comments on the Order Israino Directions to the CETE (Sushinghlo and Sushinia) Page desired in CETE (Sushinia) Page desired
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CMTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CMTC is directed to "Cy' crepects undernote choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rod	F.	Saskatchewa n	Luss you will care thy recodes, this Consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Rod	P.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nou		Coldilibia	PLEASE STOP  We are not children, we can decide what to watch and what not to.
Rod	0.	British Columbia	If Canadian content cannot stand up to the competition and nobody wants to watch it then they need to improve the content. Forcing us to watch it only props up the poor quality.  I am firmly against any form of censorship.  REPEAL this bill.
	J.	Sommibile	REPEAL UNB UNI. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastry, furge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no metry choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
RODNEY	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rodney	F.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutinary and optional to user of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rodney	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rodney	N.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [the] "CRT Ls directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rodney	М.	Columbia

			As a congrand nesson in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction to the CPT (Surhabble and Equilabelia Broadwarking Daniel Comments and the CPT (Surhabble and Equilabelia Broadwarking Daniel CPT)
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roger	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roger	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roger	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express ystrong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roger	S.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roger	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roger	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerned person in chanaa, I am submitted process to the contract of the
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  h. "excluding social media users and rearrors and their content from requisition" or the provision of the provision
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roger	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restora and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Whilst Im a firm believer that content creators should be fairly renumerated by streaming services and that streaming services should also be allowed to be profitable ultimately what to watch should be solely at the discretion of the viewer country or creation should be irrelevant. We all know a vpn can avoid any complications in viewers watching what they want. However local advertising should be directed, in the language that the user is viewing.
			Further it is high time that countries removed international barriers, provided global streaming services whether paid or financed through advertising.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roger	b.	Quebec	Freedom of speech!
			No censership!  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
oger	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (t) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
oger.			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
hemical@g	R.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. (b. th) CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the d) *CRTC is directed to (°) (or spected undertee choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ohan	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Jactiv. Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.
			matter where they choose to create.
ohan	В.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [. [the] "CRTC is directed ton to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered as a constant of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered as a constant of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered as a constant of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered as a constant of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered as a constant of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered as a constant of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting canadian content should be considered as a constant of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures are considered as a constant of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
ohit	T.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			V Control Cont
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; """""""""""""""""""""""""""""""""""
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [ their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed "O' (respect audience choice and, where ossible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roland	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction use out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bee access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			inster where uses to desire.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roland	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks is a charlete personal. Called a start southern in the commitments of the cruit of the control o
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and opcorate does as the region and the reference uniques to involve miles agriculture was should be referred to the charge and the referred to t
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roland	J.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be secres to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rolland	F.	Manitoba	The government of Canada should not be censoring canadians at all. Any government attempting to do so should be immediately removed. There should be no more, zero manipulation of the rights and freedoms of Canadians. Any leaders in all positions of politics should step down if the are not going g to hold up our God given rights to being free.
			We have a long road back already, no more going down that road of messing with our freedoms.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rolland	F.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [ they "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Romain	В.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ROMAN	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roman	l.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Romulo	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from recrease the options available." d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	L.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	Р.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation*; b. a social media users and creators and their content from regulation*; d. and that the KCRT is directed to (c) respect suddence choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ron	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (Ethe') "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ron	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
KOII	Ь.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] TRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ron	Υ.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
. 1011		Ontai iO	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
L			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	H.	Ontario

			As a second course in Grands Law submitted on the Order Law in Princeting to the CRES (Contribute to CRES
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their contact from regulation".
			b. excluding social metade abers and useful content from regulation; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
RON	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the provision of the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the provision of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	В.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			natter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	w.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a vary that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and content of the content from received the content of the content o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	R.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			L. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	R.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			L sasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	R.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	К.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	W.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	н.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Independent Media creators need to keep access for the works they create, Corporate concerns should be separate and not interfere with the Independent and citizen media creators. This allows democratization of the creation and publishing the media through the system directly to markets open to independent creators. Corporate entities should not be the sole arbiters of media, this needs to be open to all media people even the average citizen.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ron	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC 5 directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ronald	C.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [thei "CRIF" is directed not to impose regulation via numeration on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Prince Edward	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. extrouring social inequal cases and used control regulation; c. (tell) "RTCR is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ronald	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. exclusing social metal uses and it extent norm regulation. The control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ronald	w.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ronald	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ronald	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requisted, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ronald	G.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social metal uses and creators and the control requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		L	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ronald	В.	British Columbia	I believe that Government should get out of controlling the broadcast media. Let the people determine what they want to see and hear. This is supposed to be a free country. The government regularly broadcasts lies and gets away with it. If the state
Ronald	w.	Ontario	can do it, why can't the citizens? OK for thee but not for me? Hypocrisy reigns.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerning person in callang, it an instrument is not necessary to the Constant and Equitable products my regulatory framework, while appreciate the trial pointy directions entors to adoress the risks posed to entine expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and helir content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Donald	7	n

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. Exclusing social metal users and treates and user content norm regulation;  (E [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ronald H.	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ronnie	S.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rtorrine	J.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
ronny		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Totally		Coldilibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id induced not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Rory	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rosa	G.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rosa	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (c) [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rosalie	L.	Columbia

			As a concerned accord in Canada. Lam cultimities must commonly on the Order Israeling Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Excitation Resolution Resolu
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			to. Excluding social metal users and serious and other locations are supported by the company of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rosane	В.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the c
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rosanna	v.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [ the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rosario	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their   *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KCTC is directed by (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rose	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rose	R.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei   "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rose	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Danas	c	Ourh	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rosemary	No.	Quebec

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*;
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rosemary	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rosemary	P.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiouously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rosie	F.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rosita	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
RUSILd	m.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rosmarie	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks according to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ross	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ross	b.	Ontario	a water you mit take my declarate must entrance must entrance must be a controlled to the controlled t

			The state of the s
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their contact from regulation".
			b. excluding social meta-base and useful content from regulation; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ross	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the provision of the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the provision of the provisions of the provision of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ross	н.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "e
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ross	n.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. "expressions of the content of the content from regulation; d. "expressions" and the content of the content from regulation; d. "expressions" and the content of the content from regulation; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			1. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ross and Kathy	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rouben	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators." d. "excluding social media users." d. "excluding social me
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rowland	S.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roxanne	i.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverbility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding solal media users and creators and their content from requisition";  b. "excluding solal media users and creators and their content from requisition";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roxanne H	н. О	ntario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roxanne C.	C. A	lberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Roy K	d	ewfoundlan and abrador	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roy W	w 0	ntario	This is a democracy. What the heck is the government doing by touching the free press, one of the markers of free democracy and who also holds the government accountable!? This conflict of interest in the name of "protecting Canadian people" is such an obvious conflict of interest, the government should be ashamed to be so much a part of this new law. Hands off, let the press speak - even if what they say embarasses the government. I can't imagine we need big brother to save us here instead of at least a third party agency that is not in conflict of interest.
RUY W	v. O	illario	instead or at least a direct party greatly that is not in connect on interest.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. Ultimately I ask that the CRTC not regulate individual citizen online communications and their access to any online information sources. The CRTC must not censor Canadians or global information to/from Canadians.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Roy R.		lberta ritish	This Bill-11 is not needed for this purpose you have outlined. It goes against freedom of speech.
Roy L.		olumbia	Respect the majority of Canadians who are against it and dismantle or cancel it. There are issues needing to be addressed like issues dealing with AI. Social mafia can be used or discarded by Canadians as they use their own values and minds. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRITC (Sustainable and Equitable Proadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rrr Z	В	ritish olumbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
RII Z.		olullibla	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		ritish
Ruben T.		olumbia	Visit of the state
Ruben T.			Keep your disgusting controls out of my life. You already have moved this country from a desireable place to live and thrive, to an undesireable, over controlled and poorly managed country to live or visit. Wake up and let us regain the freedom of speech and right to protest like any democratic country has the right to do .  Get the H out of our personal lives and start carriag about the well being of the citizens of this country
Ruben T.			speech and right to protest like any democratic country has the right to do .
Ruben T.			speech and right to protest like any democratic country has the right to do .
Ruben T.			speech and right to protest like any democratic country has the right to do .

			A COLUMN TO THE
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. exclusing social inection debest and useful control and usefu
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rudolf	w.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and their content of the content of the content of the content of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			a. and that the CKTC is directed to (C) respect administration and the control of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Rudy	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTL is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rupert	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rupert		Pilotitu	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to egrates my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Russ	В.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social medial users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. CanCon is unsuitable to this task.
Russ	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	-		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Russell	F.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Russell	C.	Columbia

			As a second control for the first the Order Issue State of the COT (Sustainable of the COT)
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. exclusing solar intensit users and Letter in the regulator in the regul
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Russell	к.	British Columbia	As a second decrea in Casada, I am submittion museumments on the Order Issuine Directions to the CPTC Custainable and Equiphly Resolvation Regulators Example All Mills I approxists the draft policy direction's effect to address the circle.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ruth	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "for respect audience stokes and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "for respect audience stoke and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "for respect audience stoke and, where possible, increase the options and entire the content of the c
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ruth	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a dater algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Q' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ruth	R.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ruth	S.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Qr respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final resistance of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ruth	к.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", and the content from regulation of the provision in a way the provision in a way the results of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed to "for respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRT is directed to "for respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options are validated".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ruth	S.	British Columbia	a uses you mit see my resulted mit und scribbled duti.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ruth	Q.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rutii	Q.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ file) "CRT's directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ruth	Α.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from pelulation", in the content of the content from the content from the pelulation of the content from the content fro
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insue whee drep those of teach.  It trust you will take my feetback into consideration.
Ruth	R.	Ontario	he Broadcastino Act was last updated over 30 years ago. Canada needs updated broadcasting legislation to ensure we can compete and succeed on the world stage.
			We need the Ofline Streaming Act to protect Canada's independent media producers that make the Canadian shows and movies we love!  Canadian Producers are the creative enterpreneurs and risk takers that serve as the key brouchpoint for all creative, financiand business decisions that make a TV or film project a success.
			they are on the front lines of Canada's changing media landscape. And without long-overdue updates to Canada's federal broadcasting legislation, the Canadian industry is at risk of becoming become a whole lot less Canadian.  Please pass this bill and protect Canadian media!  I love this country and all the creativity with in it!
Ruth	м.	British Columbia	We need the Online Streaming Act! Thank you
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ryan	L.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed by ('p respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and that the CRC is unected to (c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			"mplementung discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of productsungs;     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online activations in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rvan	B.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscila media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan G.	G. On	ntario	As a responsed parent in Canada. Law submitting we community on the Order Jessian Directions to the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable and Equiphole Responsible to Doublance Example of the CPTC (Surtainable Example of
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  d. and that the CRC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan T.	. On	ntario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan H.	I. On	ntario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;  discoverable to the second of the second of the second of the second of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation;  discoverable to the second of the second of the second of programs of social media creators";  discoverable to the second of the secon
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan P.	. On	ntario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan H.	d. On		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ryan G.	S. On	ntario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	0.0		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators."
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  h. "sevulution social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding social metale uses a not learned a few that the content from regulation, " C [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan	c.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ryan	D.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan	Α.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rvan	т.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
.,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan	N.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			<ul> <li>excusions social media users an or reasors and meir content from regulation',</li> <li>c. Ethe j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concent that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiouously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ryan	н.	British Columbia

			V Company
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			us and use the Cut of direction of (2) respect adulance branches and, write possible, increase use upones averagine a.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be continued to the contract of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be continued to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be continued to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rylan	κ.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
.,			Why do you want to turn Canada in North Korea? If we can't read about different news in our country or, the outside world can't read about Canada. How are we not exactly like North Korea?
			Why does the Liberal government want us to be hated in the world? We are a laughing stock. Thanks Trudeau
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
YLAN	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.1 III Colletties Later the planty directions take self-view.  3.1 III Colletties Later the planty official takes the planty of the plant
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
yland	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. d. and 'trt RrTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shot be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
ley	В.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,	5.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents sho
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, n matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (°) crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content she be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concended that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	U.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of productioning in the content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content she be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, n matter where they choose to create.
			nature where usey closes on Leaste. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, n
			matter where they choose to create.
		0-4	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	N.	Ontario

			As a processed source in Chands I am submitting my comments on the Order Irruine Directions to the CRTY (Suchsinship and Equilibrium Directions to the CRTY (Suchsinship and E
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
S	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Pristy, I would like to express in solid support for the following gludate. In the point, where the safe state of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
s	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
S	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
s	5.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to abandon the Bill.
			By any reasonable definition this bill would implement a draconian level of control and ability to manipulate the information the public has access to. This attempt to control information is reminiscent of the cold war propaganda campaign and represents an alarming move towards dictatorship, rather then democracy. Please abandon and revoke this clear attempt to corrode Canada's integrity and standing as a democratic nation. We should all consider a bill such as this one, as an attack against our nation and consider anyone, or any group, that might suggest we implement such draconian measures as an enemy of not only the people, but of the state.
q	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		Unturio	This bill, along with C-18 were short sighted and ignorant to the wants and needs of the Canadian people. This governments authoritarian approach to leadership is sickening.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition"; social media users and creators and their content from requisition";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be repulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
s	d.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ĺ	Ĭ.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sabastian	к.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from explaition";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sabina	E.	Ontario

			As a concepted opens in Canada, Law submitting my composite on the Order Israelian his Confession to the CRT (Sustainable and Confession Confes
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sabine	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sabine	R.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sabrina	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sabrina	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. (the   "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sal	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks poseo to online expression, I am asking you to solidiny and enhance triese commitments in the rinal version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sally	c.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "evalution social media users and reactors and their content from resulation".
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CNC1 is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cally	c	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Chards. Law submitting my composition to the Order Israina Disortings to the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developed in Chards and Charles and Char
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "sevulution sorial media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			in execution good intended seeks and creators and merit content from regulation/dertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRYC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Listy, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure tair and equal treatment for all clandinal online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by all C-11 s implementation must be equally available to all clandinal online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sally	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sally	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC: is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy! respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evoluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me change whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastiv. I urgo the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sally	D.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version is the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
SALOME	V.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following auidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me closes whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			instead where user closes to detail.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
sam	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			<ul> <li>excluding social media users an oreators and meir content from regulation',</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sam	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Juill	J.	Ontai i U	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CNT is directed not to impose regulation", and or undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sam	R.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the COTO (Containable and Sociatable Decidentian Decident Coto
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be to further strengthen deptional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sam	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "unglementing discoverability provisions in a vary that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their inciniter from the social media users and creators and their inciniter from the social media users and creators and their inciniter from the social media users and creators and their inciniter from the social media users and creators and their inciniter from the social media users and creators and their inciniter from the social media users and creators and their inciniter from the social media users and creators and their inciniter from the social media users and creators and their inciniter from the social media users and creators and their inciniters are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and creators and the social media users are social media users and creators and the social media users are social media users and creators and the social media users are social media users and creators and the social media users are social media users are social media users and creators and the social media users are social media users and creators and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users are social media users are social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users are social m
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose requistory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sam	T.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			Le (uing LANL & MORE) in not under the control of t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms awork should let me chow whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Personally I think RIII C-1 Is not beneficial to most Canadians. But clearly defining what a bill can/can't do should be an obvious necessity.  Law/Sulfs should interfer with the matority of Canadians lives as little as possible,
Sam	w.	British Columbia	and a manufacture to the control of
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			Le (uing Last La GREC) in including a displaced in the Company of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chow whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. state of the Choise to read the Choise to read the Choise of the Choi
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Samantha	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			nature where usey under the way to the consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Samantha	K.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solding and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users its like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chowhether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lastry, Tulge the chose to react of shection to ensure ran and equal deathers to all canadian online deaths, no matter where the chose to react by on C-11s implementation most deepen available to all canadian online deaths, no matter where chose to react on the
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sameer	Z.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			o. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			nature where usey under the way to the consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Irsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following discondensity provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CNIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Samuel	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implamenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". (Ethe) "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Camus	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Samuel	M.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(*)" ("respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Samuel	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to () (er specta undernet choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Samuel	Е.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC* is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Samuel	I.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks oosed to online excression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Samuel	J.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to 'to' [creptect addinence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Samuel	Α.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Samy	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. Ithe I "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			b. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; c. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandie	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandina	Р.	Untario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
sandra	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandra	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
sandra	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
sandra	b.	Ontario

			As a represent pares in Canada. Law submitting mus comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CPTF (Sustainable and Failable Susdantine Su
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft <ol> <li>Iristly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandra	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on ordine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandra	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandra	S.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandra	н.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>a problementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and whele content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	_	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandra	E.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'to' crespect audience choice and, where cossible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandra	V.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks as a concerned person in Calman, I am audition in Continents or the Order Island precious to the Context Islands and Expendent of Islands and Isl
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "svrlutions sorial media users, and restroates and their content from requisition".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
cand		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a supposed course in County Law submitted as a supposed as the Order Law in Princeton to the County County Indian and English Residentian Developer County Indian Count
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandra	Н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding Social microis desirability of the state of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandra	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandy	S.	d and Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandy	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sandy	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 will like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the part of the following surface of t
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC Is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  STOP trying to restrict and/or control our freedom of speech in any form of mediums of communication.
Sandy	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding Social metals and useful software from Egusion (; ct. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sanjaya	C.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sanjeev	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sara	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed by ('p respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sara	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Contented presonness of the content of the Content and the Content assumed in the Cont
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the optons available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sara	S.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Suru	J.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sarah	м.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sarah	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sarah	В.	Ontario

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sarah	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and retardors and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" espect-audiomice choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sarah	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
oaran	w.	Coldilibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sarah	к.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submiliting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to *C) created requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media record records and the contract of the co
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sarah	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			I am wary of the governments need of intervention and moderation in regards to content accessible online. I do not believe that the CRTC should be allowed to jock and choose what should be available to Canadians.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sarah	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discureability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding osical media users and creators and their content from requisition";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Please don't strangle Canadians ability to move and speak freely and moistly on the global stage online!
		Contract	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sarah	s.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. excluding South interest and the state of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sarah	B	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			us and use cut is use executed by the proposition of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sarah Jane	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sarita	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. ([the] CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sasha	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To turther strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-circrected changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insue whee days does does. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sasha	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC "Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework". I do not appreciate the draft policy directions to censor online expression, I am asking you to greatly augment the final version. The legislation is a clear gateway to online censorship. It does this by giving the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission the power to regulate what they call "user generated content." This nears that what Canadians post to places like You'll be and TikTok would fall under government control.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id induced in limpse regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sasha	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation from regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			L. (tie) CNC is directed for Compose regulatory requirements of notine during increase to programs of solar media dealors , d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I uge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
Savas	т.	Ontario	be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction clacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Savas	т.	Ontario	be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Savas	т.	Ontario	be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementation of promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and undertakings of the policy direction of the policy direction of the policy direction of the policy direction:  a. "implementation of the policy direction of the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementation of the policy direction of the policy direction is expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  a. "implementation of the policy direction of the policy direction is expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Savas	т.	Ontario	be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  5. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
Savas	т.	Ontario	be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the indusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I an asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. Implementation decorated provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adaptivithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation',  c. (the) "CRTC is directed to "Cr) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options' available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
Savas	т.	Ontario	be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed in to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work s
Savas	т.	Ontario	be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. Implementation gloscoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*;  b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation',  c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.  2. To further strengthen
Savas	T.	Ontario	be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed in to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work s

			No. of the second secon
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation".
			b. excluding social metical bases and useful safety and life College (in the Content from Fegulation).  C [the] "CRTS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
sbuc	к.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation".
			b. Exclouding Social medical easier and Levinous and value (Line Horn Egyalation).  (Ethel "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	F.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	т.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their contant from regulation"; c. [their   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	w.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose for create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. This by 1. Who to like to expless inly solid pupper to the indivining guidance in the purity detection.  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation",  c. [the] "CRIT is dis
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Scott	B	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	· .

			A second data in Control Landbridge and the Control Institute Control Control Institute Control Control Institute Control Cont
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
scott	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	K.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks danity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	w.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Scott	G.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	F.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Cook		Allegar	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a second course in Course Van submitted on a second course of the Cou
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	В.	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			Implicational discover abund provisions in a way tisk imminizes betweet of since anyoniums or introductionally of the management of the content from regulation",     Evaluating social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     Element of the content of the content from regulation or interest on continuous detailed in the content from
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
scott	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Scott	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementary discovershilly provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". C. Ithel "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [this] "CRT is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c) respect calence of once on their programs available";  d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c) respect calence of once on their programs available";
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not continue regulation regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
		British	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CRTC is directed in to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the eploicy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me holicy of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
Scott	В.	British Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [Their] CRTC is directed not controlled their content from respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Scott	В.		a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CRTC is directed not control in their content from regulation provided in the content from regulation provided in their content from regulation provided in their content from their content from regulation provided in their content from their content from regulation provided in their content from their con
Scott	В.		a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed in to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the eplocy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to have online algorithms work should let me holicy of exit of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choses to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a large algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  1. [the] "
Scott	В.		a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulation year regulation year respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choses to create.  1. It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. The problem that the CRTC do identicate of an other problems of respect of programs of social media
Scott	В.		a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed in to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media acreators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't love access to these services.  4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choses to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am assign you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direct
Scott	В.		a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their CRT c directed in tot impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT c directed to (1) cinspect adulationer choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-circlicated changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementation flow of the policy direction
Scott	В.		a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their "CRT is directed in the impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed in the impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed in the impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed in the impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings, increase the epition available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2 as concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy dir
		Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed ton to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choses to create.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter al
Scott	в.	Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their "CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (1) chapsed valuationer choice and, where possible, increase the options availables.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction in the policy direction's efforts to address t
		Columbia	a. *Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users its me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online adjorithms was should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I frictly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  a. *Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcas
		Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings." b. 'excluding social media users and restors and their creators are created by their severable these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't beas excess to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  4. Firstly, Lurge the inclusion and provisions
		Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to late rajesporthms of broadcasting undertakings;" b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators, d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is rucial that the final version of the policy direction uses not across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lone access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they fell choice to create.  1. It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posses to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementation discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to aller algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators a
		Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;" b. 'excluding social media users and restors and their content from regulations/kings in respect of programs of social media creators; d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unarnabiguously, so we don't beas excess to these services social to a contract the contract of the contract o
		Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Excluding solid underla users and receive the form regulated, b. Excluding solid underla users and receive the form regulated, d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarky on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I unge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possess to online-agreement, and asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction or rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optiona
Scott	0.	Columbia  British Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;" b. "Excluding build media uses and received and the content from regulator," c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increases the options available". d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increases the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crualed that the find version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be three choices whether to make use of them.  3. The concerned that the policy direction loss carries on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't live access to these services.  4. Lastyl, I user the inclusion of a discretion to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to consideration.  I trust you will take my feeback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feeback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks power to the concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the policy direction in Canadian on the policy direction rules out access-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any m
		Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  C [192] CPICT is directed not to impose regulatory resumments on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media coresports";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increases the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm atteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. "In concerned that the policy direction lasks carry on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to resulten fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to results fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  4. Lastly, I urge this inclusion of a direction to results from a department of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  5. Feetly, I w
Scott	0.	Columbia  British Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a says that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  C. (Lee) CRTC action and the CRTC is directed not to impose requisitory registerments on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to lot (or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",  d. and that the CRTC is directed to lot (or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",  d. and that the CRTC is directed to lot (or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",  d. and that the CRTC is directed to lot (or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available).  As a concerned person in Causala, in an audient and an article and active of a large choice to create.  As a concerned person in Causala, if an submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to media separate and creates and their content creates.  As a concerned person in Causala, if an submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to miles expression, I am adding you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the Brait version.  As a concerned person in Causala, if an submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to media use and creates and their content from regulatory.  In Practy, I would like to express my strain support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  In Practy, I would like to express my strain support for the following
Scott	0.	Columbia  British Columbia	a. "Employmenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  C. (18e) CRCE desired not to impose ungulatory requirements on ordine undertakings in respect of program of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";  d. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  J. In concerned that the policy direction is lack clarity on which services.  A. Lastyl, Turge the inclusion of a direction to be caused in the inclusion of a direction to be caused to the inclusion of a direction to be caused to the expression of the inclusion of a direction to be caused to the inclusion of a direction to be caused to the inclusion of a direction to be caused to the inclusion of a direction to be caused to the commitments of the direction of the commitments in the final version.  The truth of the commitments of the commitments of the commitments in the final version.  The provision of the provision of a making you to solidily and enhance these commitments in the final version.  The provision of the provision of a making you to solidily and enhance these commitments in the final version.  The provision of the provision of a making you to solidily and enhance these commitments in the final version.  The provision of the provision of a making you to solid
Scott	0.	Columbia  British Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way this minimizes the need to all real gorithms of broadcasting undertakings;" (Left)CRT.C is directed to this mose registed provisions in a reason of monitor undertakings in reason of monitor available."  2. To further strengths these commitments to individual closes and expressor, its considerable in reason of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aread at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and options to use is let me, and any CRT-directed durings to how minimal adjointmin works should let the choose whether to make use of bravious or content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm and an expression of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and beautiful and an expression of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and content of the policy direction in t
Scott	0.	Columbia  British Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a say that minimize the need to after disportment debradactaring understatings?"  (b) the 2 Texts is affected not to impose implaying requirements on ones understatings in ensemble of programs of social medials reactors?  (c) the 2 Texts is affected not to impose implaying requirements on since substatings in ensemble of the policy direction rule out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and uptional to seen kills on the policy direction of the policy direction rule out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and uptional to seen kills may be a seen of the policy direction rule out a relative to the policy direction of the policy direction rule out and only and policy direction in the policy direction of the policy direction in t
Scott	0.	Columbia  British Columbia	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that imminises the need to after disportance of consists of the control o

			As a concerned person in Saskatchewan Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appr address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Coott	v	Saskatchewa	Sincerely a concerned citizen,
Scott	Υ.	n	Scott Y.D. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of Proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to fit to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(C) respect auditione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	w.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverpibility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverpibility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in a "implementing discoverpibility or support and implementing the provisions of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously. so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	A.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's to address the risks posed to online expression, I ask you to solidify and enhance these commitments for the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect auditione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect auditione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scott	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of prorgans of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to () (c) respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Seaghan	H.	Ontario

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sean	М.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sean	м.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scuri		Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Sean	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sean	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. Lasay, 1 use the inclusion of a disection of establishment of an entire the matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sean	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and 3.1 Introductions unset the plancy unection lacks clarity on winch services should be regulated, and tasks driving small and inche to regular services out or Callada. The final unection must be inner the appropriate scope or online uncertainties clearly and unambiguously, so we don't to see access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sean	0.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from resolutation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Coan		Ontario

			As a concerned operan in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Ironium Ricording to the CRIT (Surphyshika and Freinfalls Resolution Free Ironium). While I constitute the defi
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sean	R.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I enough dike to express my strong support for the following culdinative states and the support for the suppor
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sean	F.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the)   "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sean	F.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sean	U.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sean	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adjudices choice and, where possible, increase the ootions available", the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adjudices choice and, where possible, increase the ootions available", the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adjudices choice and, where possible, increase the ootions available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sean	T.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audionec rotice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Coan		British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I hope you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sean	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ean	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sean	E.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
SEATH	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and or "occasional deviators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "occasional deviators" where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sebastiaan	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the co
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sebastian	Р.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thig] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sebastian	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users, and reactors and their content from repulsation"
			to. Exacional social metals also also identicates and used including social regulation.  (the j "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sebastian	v.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the provision of the pro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sébastien	v.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastiv. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sébastien	D.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and where content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and didence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Seraya	S.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c] (The] "RTC is directed not to impose regulatory, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Serena	т.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Scrend		Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Serge	R.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Serge	C.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Serge	В.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the! "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory regularements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy" creptect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sergey	s.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C the! "YRC! is directed not to impose regulation", reoline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sergey	z.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sergey		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Serjik	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Seth	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy discretion: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter place interesting or interesting and creators and their content from regulation; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; discretization and regulation and regulation; discretization and regulation and regulation; discretization and regulation and regulation and regulation and regulation; discretization and regulation and regulatio
			a. and use the CANC is intellect on (c) respect abuseness clinice and, where pussating increase use uponing available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Seth	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chafook		0

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shaham	F.	Ontario	Regards, Shaham F.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shaine	Α.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shandy	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
shane	t.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC 1s directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC 1s directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shane	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shane	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social metical bases and uter cliented in the regulation; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shane	F.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'CPC' prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should be voluntary and optional to users for them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shane	T.	British Columbia	Trusk you will cake inly tections. In this consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to nonline expression, I am anxing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Shane	D	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stiatie	r.	NOVA SCOUA	As I'm sure you'll be receiving a mountain of these letters, allow me to be brief. As a Canadian citizen concerned with C-11, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			Let me first applaud the enumerated efforts below by lawmakers so far, to better protect our access and usage of online services as citizens.     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users and content creators alike, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let us choose whether to make use of them. We should be allowed to curate our own experience with content, not forced to absorb whatever the CRTC broadly defines as "Canadian", such efforts would effectively amount to demanding Big Tech enforce Nationalistic Propaganda, which is more likely than not to simply result in their refusing to serve Canadians rather than accommodate us.
			3. Still to this day, both C-11 and the policy direction lack clarity on which services should be regulated, which risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. We need the numbers, even if you want to include provisions for growth over time, we still need a guideline to know what is and isn't to be regulated.
			4. Lastly, a direction to ensure fairness and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators is a must. Financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			winer unity rivous to utent.  Trust you will kee my feedback into consideration.
Shane	Α.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] 'CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionec robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shaneisha	c.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Name	matter where they choose to create.
Shannon	D.	d and Labrador	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" esspect adultationer obvice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Shannon	L	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	1	50000	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shannon	U.	10

			As a concepted person in Canada, Lam submitting my composition to the Order Israina Disortions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Establish Residential Resi
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and which crothert from regulation";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
_			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shannon	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Shannon	R.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sildillion	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy! respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Shannon	Α.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
_			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shannon	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shapour	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shapoval	0.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sharen	M.	Ontario

			As a concepted across in Canada, I am submitting my commonly on the Order Ignation to the CRTC (Sustainable and Sandardine Sandardin
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. exclusing social metal uses and Leteral norm regiunding in respect of programs of social media creators";  (Libe) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sharon	J.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding accolal media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. "excluding accolal media users and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable and account of the second and account of the second and account of the second account of the se
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sharon	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator prequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
G1		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sharon	F.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sharon	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sharon	S.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the]: CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sharon	т.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRT cs directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT cs directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sharon	м.	Alberta	a uses you mit see my resource mito scribble dutif.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alker algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alker algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sharon	p.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sharrie	w.	Ontario	You will likely recognize the text below as being provided by Open Media. Be advised that I agree wholeheartedly with the sentiments expressed. I would also like to say that I feel there is a poor case for any Canadian Content policy whatsoever, as Canadian artists are no longer competing with just their counterparts in the USA, but around the world. At the same time, they are gaining access to a world-wide audience.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c_the_VRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect underinece choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Shaun	L.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implemental discoverbality provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter allogrations of the provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter allogrations of the provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter allogrations."
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Shauna	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sildaria	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shawn	Р.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shawn	Q.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restors and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shawn	B	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helder content from regulation".</li> </ol>
			O. excusing social meals users and creators and their content from regulation ,     ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shawn	c.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Insty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"mplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shawn	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reactors and their content from regulation", ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Shawn	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shawn	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Shawn	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] TRIC is directed not to impose regulatory, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
SHAWN	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. rescluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTL is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRTL is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shawnda	S.	Ontario	As a constant of Conda I am schooliking any companies to the Conda I am in Conda I am
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users, and reactors and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shay	F.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [ their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online interletakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to 'to' (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Shayan	z.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [ their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online interletakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to 'to' (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Shayne	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Silayile	Б.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
_		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shayne	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by 8iil C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sheelagh	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". This also aligns with Canadian's democratic rights, as we have a right to informed participation in the electoral process. It is known and empirically evident that social media and sites like Google are many Canadians main news resources. Limiting our news resources limits our abilities to participate in the electoral process in an informed manner.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. Limiting our abilities to diversify our news feeds does not align with Canadian values as outlined in the Charter, and threatens diverse representation in the media.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	м.	Ontario

			As a concerned agencia Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Israino Directions to the COTE (Combinable and Emiliable Devotation Devot
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excludino social media users and creators and helder content from regulation";
			<ul> <li>excluding social means users an oreafors and meir content from regulation ,</li> <li>(E) "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRIT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambitouously. so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sheena	Р.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Pirstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastry, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sheila	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sheila	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sheila	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sheila	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a conceiled person in Carlean, a submitted in Carlean and Carle
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", good and the content of the content
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sheila	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Shelagh	м.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3	-

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concentration of the CRU contract of the
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
SHELDON	W.	Ontario	Dear government authority,  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Please consider the following:  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm deeply concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sheldon	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discovaribility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users its like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
shelley	d.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shelley	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shelley	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shelley	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  Stop this terrible bill leave us alone we can regulate ourselves we don't need government interference.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shelley	М.	Ontario

			As a constant in County Law substitute as a constant in County Indian In
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and help content from regulation".</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exclusing social menia users and creators and unent content from regulation /  (c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shelly	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Shelly	0.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sheppe	P.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sheri	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
sheril	m.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
SheriLyn	P.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sherin	G.	British Columbia

			As a concerned access in Canada, I am submitting mus comments on the Arries Territor for the CRTC (Sustainable, and Facilitate). Paradicable Resolution Formation the definition of the CRTC (Sustainable, and Facilitate).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sherri	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sherri	D.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely!! Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. News agencies should all be equal in the law & All News Agencies and All Journalists should be legally defined as essential!! These are essential to freedom & to hinder corruption of all types!
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sherri	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			pose to unine expression; I am asking you to solonly also eminate tiese communities in the intervention.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] 'CRIC' is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sherrie	М.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
sherry	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks oosed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following uidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [.the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sherry	М.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulurified social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			10. Excluding Social metable sets and used and their Content Norm Egulation 1,  (E) (He) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chorne	D	Ontonio

			As a concepted necron in Canada, Lam culomitting my composite on the Order Insuino Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilabel Residential Reside
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exacounts seem and caused and under contain from regulation in City (The City City City City City City City City
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sherry	s.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a woy that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. and that the CRC is directed to "Or or
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sherry	A.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjointhms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c] the] "TRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sherry	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "Involving godal model and provided in a well-violated model and the angular model and the angular model and the angular model and the angular model model and the angular model angu
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sherry	M.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sherry	R.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Silerry	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sherry	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ĺ			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sherry	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			The state of the s
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter alloporthms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter alloporthms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and opponal to users like me, and any LKIL-directed changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use or them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sherry	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Silerry	C.	Coldinola	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, Lurge the inclusion of a direction censure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sherry-Lee	Н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I, am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (c, the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they allose to Ceste.  I trust you will have my feedback into consideration.
Sheryl	н.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'CI' or pespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sheryl	т.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social metal uses and it carbon and user London. How the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Shiloh	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Shirlov	н.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shirley			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shirley	IE.	Alberta

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helder content from requisition";</li> </ol>
			D. Exclusing Social mental steets and treators and unert content norm regulation),     (the) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shirley	G.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users, and rearbors and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Prince	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. Please respect my Freedom as a Canadian Citizen as outlined in the Charter of Rights and Freedom.
Shirley	В.	Edward Island	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Does do notifie expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shirley	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and nether content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shirley	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Chirloy	н.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Shirley	11.	Aipeltd	I am a concerned Canadian who is asking the federal government to strengthen the regulations related to Bill C-11, especially those pertaining to completely eliminating allowing accross-tge-board algorithm alteration.
			I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and reators and help content from reaulation".
			c. (the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sibyl	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sidney	S.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CHIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Tristy, I would like us express in synciang support to me inclinating entertaints of the control of the cont
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Simon	G.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Simon	В.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		0.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Simon	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
simon	t.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Simon	F.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online interletakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 't' O'; respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Simon	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			pose to unine expression; I am asking you to solounly after emergence interventions.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing uscoverability provisions in a way that imminizes the need to after algorithms of urbanasing y intertainty.  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the? "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CKTC is directed to "to" (prespect addingence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and mat the LYL L is directed to (C) respect alumence croice and, where possible, increase the oppoins available:  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final value and expression, it is crucial that the final value and in the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			ae voluntary ano optional to users like me, and any LXTL-orrected changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use or them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unamitiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Simon	c	Alborta

Part				Hello.
Lange of the control				I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
From the control of t				1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
Service of the control of the contro				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
Services of the services of the services of the services of the service of the services of the se				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Service Servic				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
And the second above to record the second of the second above to t
Service Servic
A contract of the contract of
Fig. 1. Part of the target of the segment of the se	Simon	D.	Ontario	As a concerned citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to
Series    Part
He and to the CVC Ce described by CVC processed and processes and proces				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
Is survivery and information and service of the company of the com				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Service of the service of a facilitary is the residence of a facilitary in the service of a facilitary is received by a facilitary in the service of a facilitary in the service of a facilitary is received by a facilitary in the service of a facilit				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Process   Proc
Service Servic				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Service  A source of proton of Control, I can admitted my composed on the Cold Control proton on the COLT. (Sectionable and Equation Endocration) Regulatory Promoters), While I agreement and an admitted my control proton on the COLT. (Sectionable on the Cold Control proton on the COLT. (Sectionable on the Cold Control proton on the COLT.)  The Cold Cold Cold Cold Cold Cold Cold Cold				I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Figure 1. Tray, I was don't be compared to the control of the properties of the prop	Simon	К.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Figure 1 was a service of the second control				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
4 A confirmed to CTICL deviced to 1/12 regress authorized robusts of substantial to the processing in expension of the processing of the p				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
Service Servic				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Simon I. Owner.  A Laby, I gar be included or five access to these are faced resonance for all Canadian ordine creators. Any francial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C.11's implementation must be qualify available to all Canadian ordine creators, no material faced in the promotion opportunities created by Bill C.11's implementation must be qualify available to all Canadian ordine creators, and material faced in the promotion opportunities created by Bill C.11's implementation must be qualify available to all Canadian ordine creators, and material faced in the promotion opportunities created by Bill C.11's implementation must be qualify available to all Canadian ordine creators, and material faced in the promotion opportunities and designation of the promotion opportunities and designation opportunities and desig				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Strong L. Outside  A successful team for performance in County, 1 and date to the preformation in County I am planting from the performance in County I am p
Simple L Quality  A conformed person in Careala, I am submitting my comments on the Chifer Instanting Directions to the Chiff (Guatanable and Equation Procedurating Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the drift policy direction's efforts to address the raise process to confine expension, I am additing to the confine and interest t				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concorned partner in Canada, 1 am solimiting my comments on the Circle Equation (Section to the Circle Equation (Section 1) and the Circle Equati				I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Fig.   Lend is the let express my shrong support for the following palence in the policy directions:	Simona	L.	Quebec
b. "teck-damp cased model users and created and their contract from regulators," c. and that the CRTL's information children children from regulators, c. and that the CRTL's information children childr				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
2. To further structure that accommission is individual chain or desperation, it amount that the first version of the policy direction rides on taxones the board algorithm attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must be departed by all chains on the content of the policy direction (less desiry on which services.  4. Listly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creaters. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creaters.  5. Southum C.  5. Southum C.  6. Southum C.  6. Listly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creaters. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creaters. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creaters. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creaters. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creaters. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creaters. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creaters. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creaters. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creaters, or institute when they dissented into created created and content or a policy				b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-Greeted changes to low online algorithms work should be regulated, and this doring small and niche formings services and of primary.  3. In concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services tools the regulated, and incide driving services and of company services and or clarical. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastry, I rugue the incidence for a dequal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. Columbia  6. Columbia  7. Columbia  8. A concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions is the COLIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the control of the colic operation operation of the colic operation operat unumbiguously, so we don't bee access to these services. 4. Lasky, I urge the Inclusion of adrection to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  8. Columbia  C. Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equatable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to soliday and enhance these commitments in the final version.  8. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the investor plant appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to soliday and enhance the policy direction in the CRIC of direction of the policy dire				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Sight and Chumbs  C. Sight and Chumbs  As a concerned person in Canada, 1 am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While 1 appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks are concerned person in Canada, 1 am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While 1 appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks are concerned person in Canada, 1 am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While 1 appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks are concerned to the proper incidence of the control of the CRTC is directed to the proper incidence of the control of the control of the CRTC is directed to the proper incidence of the policy direction is oder across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and explorate to excess to threat services.  4. Lardy, 1 urge the incidence of the policy direction disease of the policy direction defined the exploration must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where the properties of the policy direction of the policy direction of the policy direction must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where the properties of the policy direction of the policy directio				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Sighban C Columbs As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I result which the to express my strong guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings."  b. "Excluding social media users and crossor and their cortex from regulatory."  c. and that the CRTC is directed to [C] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  1. To further strengthen these commitments in clinicidal choice and expressor, I is; council that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at prometing Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be mediated to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at prometing Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be mediated where the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at prometing Canadian content should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bise access to these services.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Size  M. Ortairo  A. Contairo  A. Territy, Twodel Bise to appears my strong support for the flowing of frecition:  a. Trenty, Twodel Bise to appears in Canada, I am autheriting my comments to inclinication in				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, 1 am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possess of the control of the c	Siobhan	C		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings." b. "Excluding social media users and creations and their content from regulation," d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further terreplate these commissions, it is crucial that the users of the options and appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks a "implementation in unatable or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  5. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  5. I a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks on the properties of programs of social media creators";  6. The CRTC is directed to to topic operation in a way that minimizes the need to all level operation of the policy direction in a social media creators.  5. The properties of the policy operation and programs of social media creators";  6. To further strengthen these commissions in a way that minim		-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
B. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation? C. (bet) "CRT. is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators? C. and that the CRT. is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options waisition.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it, is reculal that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be to voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT. Circrected changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm connemed better inclusion of a direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  3. I'm connemed that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings ideally and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I user the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. I trusty usual take my feedback into consideration.  5. I recommend that the policy direction is an assistance of the policy direction is a support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  5. I recommend that the policy direction is an assistance of the policy direction is access and their content from regulation?  5. I contain the policy direction is descr				<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ul>
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evoluntary and optional to users like mb, and any CRTC-directed changes to thow online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urpe the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choses to create.  Turust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments of threadcasting undertakings';  a "Implementation discoverability provisions in an way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. C. (the') CRTC is directed in on to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the RCRTC is directed on the impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the RCRTC is directed on the impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the RCRTC is directed on to im				b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_thei_*CRT_6 is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Silue M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I to making you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. In Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction and the time of the policy direction is a "implementing discoverability provision is in a wey that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings."  3. I'm concerned that the CRTC is directed to the policy direction on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators."  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction alces clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to theses exervices.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
4. Lastly, I rurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Situe  M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vary that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking on the policy direction rules suct across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be routinary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chinges to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online crea				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
matter where they choose to create.  It ust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Sive M. Ontario  M. Ontario  M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementation are a way that minimizes the need to all properties of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. thelp "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation and expression, it contents on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not individual choice and expression, frout a that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directio				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Silue M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the!) *CRTC is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not individual choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it could that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't loss access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comment				matter where they choose to create.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all real algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Cithel "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "City respect audience choice and, where possible in crease the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darry on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, Juvold	Siue	м.	Ontario
a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I unge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Sivan  M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I yould like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the order to alter algorithms of broadcasting undert				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and supression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Sivan  M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I yould like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the order to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".				<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ul>
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Sivan  M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, yould like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, U arge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Sivan  M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, yould like to express my strong support for the following guidance in longly direction's place in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and notional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me change whether to make use of them
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Sivan  M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they can be equally a				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Sivan M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, yould like to express my strong support for the following guidance in longify direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
Sivan M. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";				matter where they choose to create.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, 'would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",	Sivan	м.	Ontario
<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
, ,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,				<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ul>
c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  From recent news stories and actions by social media platforms (such as Instagram and Google News) to hide news content from Canadians, its a strong reply that Bill C-11 will impact how we understand and stay updated on what's happening within matter where they choose to create.	Sivani	s	Ontario	our own country and communities. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
matter where they choose to create.  From recent news stories and actions by social media platforms (such as Instagram and Google News) to hide news content from Canadians, its a strong reply that Bill C-11 will impact how we understand and stay updated on what's happening within	Sivani	S.	Ontario	our own country and communities. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Skylan	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution sorial media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Skyler	I.	Yukon	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Slav	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sleins	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sofia	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Soili	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social indeal users and creators and their content from regulation", (c) the   "CRIT's directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Solomampio nona			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Dieudonne	R.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			b. exclusing solar intensit users and creation and term continuous more regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Solomon	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in a support of the su
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Somy	w.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and their content of the content of the content of the content of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Sonia	w.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sonja	R.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed on to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adiagnices choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
sophia		British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "follower provisions" in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "follower choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sophie	М.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. exclusing social metal uses and Leterior and treat content nort regulator).  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Soraya	м.	Ontario

			As a concerned corresp in Canada, Law submitting must commonte on the Order Institute of th
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Soren	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
sorin	i.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. This type industries or expression; so unique support for the following glounder, in the point, the rector.  3. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To cuther strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Soultan	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. excusing social menta users and creators and uner content from regulation /, c. [the] "CRTs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Spencer	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to dimine Expression, I am aboutly you to sounly and eminate uses communications in the mine version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the project of increases an increase of the project o
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Spencer	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerned person in Lahaba, I ail submitting my comments on the Urder Issuing Directions to the KIL (sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting kegulatory Framework), while I appreciate the graft policy direction is efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. [the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of sould media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. an unit unit cut is to unit to the cut is a unit
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Spencer	D.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sporty	C	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRLC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, 1 would like to express lifty solidy support for the information in the local relation of the local
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Stacey	K.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Stacey	E.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and finder content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	н.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stacey	n.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stacey	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "C) crepacte undertoce choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Stacey	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jucey		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed or 'Or ("exsect adjustic procedure choice and, where cossible, increase the ootions available".
			a. and unit the Unit is a inequal to 1(c) respect administration where prossible, increase use options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stacie	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stan	G	Alborta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			It is not because the policy unection has been your metal made seems to these services.      Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			1. Usus, 1 use use they choose to create.  It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stanley	Р.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Stanley	R.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"miplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Stanley	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Statiley	in.	Albeita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stanley	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Implications used versions provisions in a way late in imminizes use need to describe disconnections to disconnections of the content from the form regulation.  b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation.  c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;  d. and that the CRTC is directed to *Cy (expects callednece choice and, where possible), increase the options available.  d. and that the CRTC is directed to *Cy (expects callednece choice and, where possible), increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stasia	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Statton	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and), where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
GL.			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Also, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. Lastly, if there is any room to ban and make illegal the accisa
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stef	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks oosed to online excression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Also, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Lastly, if there is any room to include a new law similar to Utah's new law requiring adult websites to verify user's age, that would be great.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stef	T.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stefan	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Stefan	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stelan		Coldinold	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed no to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously. so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stefan	V.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to continue expression, I am a solution in Calcular to the continue and the continue a
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalistion".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and impartial treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stefan	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimize the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Stefano	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			Too Much control!
			No longer a free country. The dictator Trudeau doesn't like the truth over the internet since MSM is paid with out tax dollars and controlled by Trudeau.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulating from regulating in the programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulatings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengther these commitmene, and any individual To-clinical adjustments and the policy direction that policy direction the policy direction that policy direction the policy direction that policy direc
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insue where usey choose to Ceste.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stefano	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Stefany		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stelany		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stella	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stella	R.	Ontario	I am a concerned person in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression; however, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be resultated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stella	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulating from regulating in the programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulatings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sten	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephan	S.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CRTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. then that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephane	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following audance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephanie	D.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephanie	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephanie	н.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users illie me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me recovered on the control of the contro
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephanie	R.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Charles	C	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephanie	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephanie	G	Nova Scotia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephanie	P.	Quebec	Firstly, having the government as some kind of giant "parental controls" on the internet of Canadian citizens is terrible and dangerous.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC identeed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengths these committee these committee these continued the second these continued to the continued the second the s
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insus where they choose to desire.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephanie	В.	Alberta British
Stephanie	C.	Columbia	Please leave our internet alone. It is up to us to decide what we want to learn about, watch and share! Mind your own business! Stop messing with free speech! Your karma is gonna get you if you mess with free speech! Hugs As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from culation".
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the KRTC is directed to () respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Stephen	В.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	D.	Dialismek	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	C.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from requilation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	T.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter alloyer/thms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			inactic where they choose to leade.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTIc is directed to t'ci impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTIc is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Charl	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	r.	Unidill

			· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and help content from regulation".</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exclusing social menia users and creatives and unent content from regulation /  (c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and restoration and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, in croases the options available", except the content of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Stephen	c.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	К.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "Cy" (cry respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	W.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks oosed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their   CXTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators"; d. and that the KCTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
stephen	w.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			I am asking you to always please keep in mind that algorithms = AI.  All is a catalyst for endgame politics and policies that will undo every freedom we've earned since Enlightenment.  We deserve better.
			<ol> <li>Next, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helier content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. Exhaulting social means and reference in the regulation in the contract of the part of
			3. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			4. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			5. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalistion".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. Less regulation especially for small creators is crucial.
Stephen	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Freedom of choice on the internet  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stephen	r.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	G.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRIT is directed not to impose resultatory requirements on online undertakinos in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Steve	A.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>excluding social means users an oreacros and meir content from regulation',</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	C.	Quebec

			As a concerned necron in Canada I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CPTF (Sustainable and Equilable Providencian Bonulaton: Examples of the Annual
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			I. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
_			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei \ 'RCTC is directed not to impose regulation' requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Steve	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	m.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory regulatory and only increases the options available". d. and that the CRTC is directed to "to" increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Steve	v.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjornthms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c] the] "TRIC's directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Usay, 1 usg us the they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ctovo	C	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Charles I am submitting my composition to the Order I region Dispertings to the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developed Personal). While I recognize the definition of the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developed Personal).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exacuting social metals uses and return with regulation; and the control of the state of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grige the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	E.	Ontario	As a concerned operan in Canada. Law submitting we commonts on the Order Insuing Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Francescales that destination is direction's fifteet to address the risks.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Seculating and additional and standard their content from consultation".
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
steve	m.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
61.			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	IH.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optionise to uses sinke rine, and any CRC-cruected changes to involveme algorithms wink should be the choose writering to unknown or the makes use or time of an analysis of the control
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Steve	Р.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media usera and treat cross rand their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me charge whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			L satyl, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			The second by the Control of Provinces of Pr
			. casy, tage the inconsistion a direction to ensure rail and equal deadless to an California of promotion apportunities deaded by an C-11s implementation must be equally available to an California of matter where they choose to create.  It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	т.	British Columbia	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	т.		matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Steve	т.		matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of troadcasting undertakings";
Steve	т.		matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
Steve	т.		It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provision in a very but an imitmate the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Steve	т.		It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed and to timpose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and chief content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and chief content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to 'C)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Steve	т.		It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. 'implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings'; b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,' d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choices whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Steve	T.		It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the] CRTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the] CRTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed in CVIC in selected undertec choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choices whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportuniti
Steve	Т.		It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. 'implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings'; c. thel' CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks dairly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Columbia	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the] CRTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the] CRTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed in CVIC in selected undertec choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choices whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportuniti
		Columbia	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media reators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media reators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose
		Columbia	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commiments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the neet to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity, on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned
		Columbia	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Individual sciences and the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter a legorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "Solidating social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"  c. their ("RTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my str
		Columbia	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementaring discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed or "Cr prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available":  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into cons
		Columbia	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) [CRTC is directed or (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available: d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available: d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available: d. and that the CRTC is directed to the control of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lasks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  1. It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  3. It rust you will take my feedback into consid
		Columbia	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possess to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implemental discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to aller adjournable of the policy direction of the content from regulation",  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",  a. I'm concerned that the policy of intercent in the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bese access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Firstly, Levold like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy
Steve	Б.	British Columbia	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidily and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjornthms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] *CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures alimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable B
		Columbia	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possess to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implemental discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding accial media users and creators and their content from regulation",  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is excluded the version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bese access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lunge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Irrust, you will take my feedback into consideration.  3. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable B
Steve	Б.	British Columbia	Instate you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Friety, I runded like to express my from support for the following guidance in the policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the control of
Steve	Б.	British Columbia	Intrat you will take my feetback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, Inwald like to express my training support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Emplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings?";  b. "Excluding social media users and recroacts and their condition from regulatory."  c. I (their CRTC is directed for (1) respect administed because and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthms these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like ine., and any CRTC redeed themises to how entire algorithms with should be the continued to the properties and the properties are also all the properties and the properties and the properties appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unantaphyously, so we don't be accessed to these services.  4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to consideration.  4. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's
Steve	Б.	British Columbia	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  4. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction and the support of the content from regulation;  5. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction and the support of the following guidance in the policy direction in the support of the policy direction in the support of the policy direction relates and the policy direction lacks called choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutary and optional tourses like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to those online and any analysis of the policy direction lacks called the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose accesses to these services to create.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no marker where they choose to create.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online
Steve	Б.	British Columbia	Intrate you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I mould like to express my trans gupport for the following guidance in the policy direction.  2. The resulting social time to express my transport gupport for the following guidance in the policy direction.  3. "Inspirementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  4. "Inspirementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  5. "Reculting social media users and certors and their content from regulation", and the total content of their content of the content
Steve	Б.	British Columbia	Interty ow life any refeated, into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online appreciation, I am asking you to solidy and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Timphementry discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  3. Timphementry discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  4. Institute of the comment of the comment of the comment of the policy direction of the comment of the comment of the policy direction of the policy direction of the comment of the policy direction of the comment of the policy direction of the comment of the poli
Steve	B.	British Columbia	Intraty you will take my feetback into consideration.  Intrust you will take my feetback into consideration.  Intrust you will take my feetback into consideration.  Intrust you will take my feetback into consideration.  In Ferthy, I swold like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  In Ferthy, I swold like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  In Ferthy, I swold like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  In Ferthy, I swold like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  In Ferthy, I swold like the pression, I am asking you to solidily and enhance these commitments the need to alter algorithms of the control of the policy direction in the control of the pression of the policy direction in the control of the pression
Steve	9. S.	British Columbia	Inter you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to entire expression. I am asking you to solidly and enhance these comminments in the final version.  Firstly, I would like to express my treng august for the Belowing uddress the big policy direction.  Firstly, I would like to express my treng august for the Belowing uddress that by policy direction and their content from regulation.  For Clin 12 TCTC in direction of 10 or in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting understaings')  For Clin 12 TCTC in direction of 10 or in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting understaings')  For Clin 12 TCTC in direction of 10 or interest and the more content from regulation.  For Clin 12 TCTC in direction of 10 or interest and content of the policy direction rules and caresos the board algorithm alternation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content about the tree of the content of 10 or interest and the policy direction in the CRTC is direction for inclinate clinic sciency in which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and nich brorspan services out of Canada. The first direction must define the appropriate scope of online understainings clearly and understand when the policy direction in care of the content of the policy direction in care of the content of the policy direction in care of the content of the policy direction in care of the content of the policy direction in care of the content of the policy direction in care of the content of the policy direction in care of the content of the policy direction in care of the content of the content of the policy direction in care of the content of the policy direction in the content of the policy direction in care of the content of the content of the policy direction is efforts
Steve	9. S.	British Columbia	Intuit you will take they refease, knot consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expensation, I am which you to saidify a and whatever these commitments in the first version.  Fire Play, I would like to express my strong support for the following guiders in the policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expensation, I am which you to saidify and whatever these commitments are possed to address the risks and creators and their content from regulation's programs of social media creators';  In Play, I would like to express my strong support for the following guiders in the policy direction is content from regulation's programs of social media creators';  In Play, I would like the expression of the content from regulation's programs of social media creators';  In the strong the development of the content from regulation's programs of social media creators';  In the strong the development of the content from regulation's programs of social media creators's content of the policy direction less of section of the content of the policy direction is cares the social adjustment of the policy direction is cares the my and any CRTC-directed changes to have received the make use of them.  In the content of the policy direction is cares the my and any CRTC-directed changes to have a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators and any analysis of the content of the policy direction is an administry my comments on the Order Basing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the content o
Steve	9. S.	British Columbia	Inter type will take the production for consideration.  As a concerned person in Clavada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to inter-expense. I am always to subsidiery and enhance these commitments in the final version.  The Prof. I would like the corprisents of the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed for the following address in the policy direction.  The Prof. I would like the corprisent type and of the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the native prof. I appreciate the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  The CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework) and the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the crtch and the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the crtch and the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable
Steve	9. S.	British Columbia	Intuit spe will take in prefetable, into consideration.  As a concerned person in Clansda, if an submitting my comments on the Order Sealing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks powed to roll new expression, it am saling you to solidly and relief in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks powed to roll new expression, it am saling you to solidly and relief in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks powed from the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to relief to the policy direction of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to relief to the policy direction of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks probe dot to relieve see of other sea created and promoting Canadian content should be required by the Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks powed to the care content policy and proper policy and proper policy and proper policy and proper policy and pro
Steve	9. S.	British Columbia	Indicate whether directors to create.  It has a you will also a presented into consideration.  As a concerned groups in Cassada, as a substitution per generation of the Children State Castal State of the Casta Castal State of Castal State
Steve	9. S.	British Columbia	Instant you will also the preface in created, I am submitting thy comments on the Creder Issuing Directions to the CMIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting thy comments on the Creder Issuing Directions to the CMIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of a submitted provided in the content of the content from regulatory.  1. Forting I, leaded like to express my strong paper for the following pulsations in the content from regulatory.  2. Forting I, leaded like to express my strong paper for the following pulsation.  3. The content of the content of the content from regulatory.  3. The content of the direction of the content from regulatory.  3. The content of the direction of the content from regulatory.  3. The content of the direction of the content of the co

			23 July 2023
			23 July 2023  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Freedom of speech is the BEDROCK of democracy. I am APPALLED that the government of Canada would even DARE to meddle in speech uttered by Canadians. Ottawa has NO BUSINESS AT ALL even getting started interfering with our words!
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steve	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media. d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoulbe voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
teven	I.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from population"
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
even	Р.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adultinence robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			Le voucine year opposition to uses a line rine, an any cut- remarked usinges or in on time age of unitine the propriet of the
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
teven	м.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		4	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing social meta-base had useful and
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
even	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks accord to college purposerior. Law actions you to college you to college you to college you can be a supply of the colleg
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
teven	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			b. Excluding social meta-base had useful and
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
even	m.	Ontario

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discovariability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			b. exclusing social metals uses and used ones and use of the control of the contr
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
STEVEN	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
steven	z.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. excluding souls means and used son't seem from regulator in the control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steven	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. all "CRTC is directed to "[C] respect auditorice choice and, where possible, increase the options available". d. d
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steven	М.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steven	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steven	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cir essect adulgance choice and, where ossible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Steven	T.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "RTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. Furthermore, in principle, any government action intended to censor anything other than severe hate speech is illegal, unnecessary and unconstitutional.
Steven	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Steven	R.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stewart	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  It's NOT needed. No one asked for this. Canadian content creators are 100% able to manage their own creations. This will hurt Canadian content by forcing creators to do things they don't want to do. If this bill goes thru as is, I will be leaving Canada
Stewart	W.	Ontario	and taking my 11 million subscribers somewhere else. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy'c respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stuart	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "exulcing social media users and creators and their connect from reculation", social media users and creators and their connect from reculation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stuart	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to omine expression; I am asking you to sominy and eminate trase community may be a community of the community of the community of the community. I have been sometimed to the community of <ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "RDT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Stuart	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Swart	150	Ontai iU	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the optons available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Stuart	K.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Stuart	Р.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Studie		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIS id induced not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Stuart	E.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Studie		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "YRG1's directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sue	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sue		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRTs id interced not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sue	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sue	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Seculating and provided and provided and the consense from provided and provide
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambitious by see don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sue	Υ.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helfer content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>excluding social means users and creators and meir content from regulation ,</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sue	D.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to note the following: a. I am not concerned if social media companies need to alter their algorithms; b. I think individuals who do not earn any money, endorsements or material goods from social media posts should be excluded but anyone who profits from it should be considered for regulation, <ol> <li>b. I think individuals who do not earn any money, endorsements or material goods from social media posts should be excluded but anyone who prohits from it should be considered for regulation,</li> <li>Measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be mandatory, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should apply to all forms of social media.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and protection of Canada, Candian content and Canadian citizens should be the primary consideration, even if it means we lose access to some services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction support Canadian online creators using systems that Support Canada and I am fine if some platforms are excluded due to concerns about how those platforms work, security of data, privacy and links to foreign governments or actors that may not support Canadian values.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sue	M.	Columbia

			As a concepted energy in Canada, Lam submitting my companies on the Order Insulan Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Envisible Residential Reside
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helic content from regulation".</li> </ol>
			of the Unit of Social metal users and execution reper content from regime undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. the Unit of Social metal users and execution reper content from regime undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Listy, Turgle the infoliation of a foreste.  4. Listy, Turgle the infoliation of a foreste.  4. Listy, Turgle the infoliation of a foreste.  5. Listy of the infoliation of a foreste.  6. Listy, Turgle the infoliation of a foreste.  6. Listy, Turgle the infoliation of a foreste.  7. List implementation must be equally available to all Landolan online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sue	м.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To truck and applicant truck containing of the me, and any CRTC-direction applicable to the property of the violation and violation to the property of the violation and violation to the violation and violation and violation to the violation and violation and violation to the violation and
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't to see access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sukhmanpn			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
et	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resultation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] TCRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastiv. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sung-uk	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
SUNIL	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where truly choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sunshine	м.	Alberta	As a concepted parent in Chands I am submitting my comments on the Order Insuina Directive to the COTO (Containable and Envisible Containable and Envisible Containable and Envisible Containable Cont
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and wheir content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>a. exculuing social meals users and treators and their content from regulation ,</li> <li>c. (the) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Susan	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justil	٥.	O TRUITO	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	T.	Ontario

			Annual Court Landson to Court Landson to Court Landson Cou
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	c.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatiory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	J.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Does do notine personnel and a submitted in the control of the con
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Susan	G.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "RTCs id directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sucan	Li Li	Columbia

			As a support of Court I are submitted as a support of the Court I are submitted as a submitted as a support of the Court I are submitted as a submi
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	D.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Susan	P.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create on another topic, I strongly oppose Bell Media's move to request restriction of local news coverage.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	H.	Manitoba	As a concerned Canadian, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am requesting you solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. To begin with, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimises the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [they *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media users and of the content of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to all users, like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should, let me, choose whether or not to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned this policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where and which platform they use to create their content.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	E.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	Α.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susan M	C.	British Columbia

			As a second of the second of t
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and rearbors and their content from requisition".
			b. exclusing social metals uses and creators and trier continent norm registration. For the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susana	S.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," d. "excluding social media users and creators," d. "ex
			a. and the CRYCL's directed to (C) respect admentice choice and, where possible, increase the options available:  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Susanne	м.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susumo			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator prequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
susanne	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Susanne	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Susie	S.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Suzana	Р.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Juzaild	r.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Suzanne	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a second course in Course I am submitted and a second course in Course I am a second course in Course I am a second course I am a se
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
suzanne	0.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am saking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (KTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me close whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Suzanne	R.	British Columbia	Littles you mit take my required mit Consideration.
			I am a concerned Canadian with an interest is Bill C-11, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version, including the inclusion of definitions for terms such as "minimize", which at present are too generalized. I believe the media I choose to consume must be self-curated, and not imposed upon me.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Suzanne	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Suzumic	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhancer these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discover admity provisions in a way triat imminifizes the need of after adjustment in our observable of the provision of the p
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Suzanne	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "MCRTC is directed to ("c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.    A stitution   Company   C
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	_		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sven	F.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Starty 1 tag to in the country of
Svetlana	1.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Syd	J. Н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I m submitting my comments on C11. This legislation is a step by the government towards total censorship of Canadians. Stop this authoritarian take over. This legislation is evil.
5,0		- nocita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			make whee very know of clear.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Syed	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing social means are a rule results and rule content from registrom, respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sylvain	L.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sylvain	В.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Sylvan	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id induced in users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id induced not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Sylvie	R.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.1 In Concerned that the planty unection leads using virtual severes should be regulated, and has driving small and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be used to the purpose services using useful plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The mail direction must be useful or spiritual plants and incher integril services out of Canada. The m
			matter where they choose to create.
Sylvio	C.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Contenting person in Canadact, in a Student Content of Conten
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Т	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			C and the CH of CHT is discreted to "(c) respects updated by the character of the character
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
T. Justin	T.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Taha	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing uccordancy provisions in a way use imminizes the need to deter algorithms or invaluationing intertainings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction censure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tahir	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and their content from regulation", b. "excluding osial media users and their content from regulation osial m
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chosely effect of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I ure the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Talia	3.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. exclusing social metals uses and used ones and use of the control of the contr
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  We simply can't continue blindly down such paths.
Talis	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tamara	Q.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "exulution sorial media users and practors and help content from regulation"
			to. Exclusing social metal users and creative and user content from Egulation ;  (c) the j "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tamara	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tamara	F.	British Columbia
			I do not need govt thinking on my behalf what I should and shouldn't think based on what I see on the internet. My midd works well. Censorship is not required for people. There is no reason why people can not think for themselves, frequient themselves. This is not about care of people. This is about unanipulation of a country. This is about distorting reality for political and power. Complete govt over reach. The average Canadian knows this. Just look at the News It is what it is. It's a themselves. The second of the control of the contr
Tamara	w.	British Columbia	shame. Can't wait for a new Prime Minister. Trudeau is a criminal. This only serves his ill intent to be even harder to prove. We don't need this bill. It's Canada. We are free to govern ourselves, free to think for ourselves. We don't need thought police to navigate on our behalf. Get out of my head and my life. Im fully capable. Get real. No Bill C-11.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the ]*CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to (°) (°) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tamas	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and potional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tammey	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tammy	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Tamur	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	Ĺ		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tania	L.	Ontario

			As a constant of C
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			b. Excluding Solar integrate uses and Letter with replaced in the control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tanya	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tara	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. Ithel "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation "provisioning undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tara	F.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Tara	F.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social metal uses and it clearly and in the control of programs of social media uses and it clearly requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tara	T.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tara	F.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tara & Robert	м.	Ontario	TO USE YOU THE CONCENT HE CONSIDER AUDIT.

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and wheir content from requiation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tarik	Q.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Tariq	N.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tatjana	T.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Tatyna	K.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Taylor	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks noted to notine expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			pose to omine expression; I am asking you to soundy also eminate trues communities in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the projection: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [, the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Taylor	E.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "excluding social media users and creators and help content from requiation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Taylor	G	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. exclusing souls means uses along the state of the stat
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Taz	J.	Ontario	As a concurred operation of Standa, I am publishing my comments on the Order Insuine Directions to the CPCF (Sustainable and Equilibble Develops the Order Insuine Directions to the Order Insuine Direction to the
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect to a consistent of the provisions o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ted	R.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C!" respect adungence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ted	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ted	g.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ted	d.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulgance choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ted	P.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", discoverable to the social media users and creators and their content from regulation and reg
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board altorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ted		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teena	т.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy ("expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tegan	R.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Telisha	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and "or
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastry, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teo J	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terance	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverable provided in a plant of the provided in the polymer production of the provided in the polymer provided in the polymer production of the provided in the provided
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teresa	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teresa	T.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teresa	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
TERESA	v.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
TERESA	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teresa	F.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teresa	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teresa	w.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teresa	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to collect property and the collection of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Teresa	R.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-

			· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
			Please let us have the freedom to choose our media content. I like a diverse perspective and it does not feel right that it seems like the CRTC is choosing more Canadian content or deciding for me what I understand why there are increasing controls on our lives. Please be in favour of freedom. Could you please tell me what is wrong before the implementation of C-11? It seems like too much interference. Am I wrong?
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			 Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teresa	к.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ieri	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Teri	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Terrance	R.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			b. Excluding social metal assets an oreative and unter content from regulation; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terrence	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Terry	C.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding social medical bases and sections and section in the Equation (. C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terry	B.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding social meta-base and useful and regulation, "c, [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terry	Α. (	Ontario	As a concerned normal in Canada. Law exposition are composition to the CPT (Surtainable and Equilibrial producestion Deculators Exposured). While I appropriate the destination of effects to address the circle.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the provision of the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the provision of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
terry	j. (	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Terry	S. 0	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. tipe]: CRICE is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
terry	r. (	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soal media users and creators and their content from requisition", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not be impose regulator, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators." d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terry	J. C	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators." d. "excluding social media users." d. "excluding social me
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. 2507; Tugle uit includant of a traction of a size tail and equal destricts of an Canadian of mine destrus, any minimal of promotion apportunities destructly bill C-113 implementation must be equally available to an Canadian of mine destrus, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terry	S. N	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
T		Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terry

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I asing you to solidity and enhance the Grace (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terry	J.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to solinies with a single post to solinies with a single po
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's disdirected not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be secres to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terry	s.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(") respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and that the LRLL is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter hybrid processors.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terry	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			t. [the] CNTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "CyC respect sudience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terry	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutionary and optional to users it like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Terry	D.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Terry	Ь.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's effort the Regulatory on the Regulatory of the Regulatory on the Regulator
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implemention discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms or proadcasting undertakings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tessa	т.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei "CRIC is directed not to impose reculation" requirements on online undertakinos in respect of programs of social media creators":
That's			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promotino Canadian content should being dictatorship			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
if you sensor the people	-		3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
we have a right to know what			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
going on in our world it'			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
s time to stand up fo	R.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			<ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Newfoundlan	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Theodore	C.	d and Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "serulding outlanderia issers and greaters and their content from requisition".
			b. Excounting social mental sees and retained shall use in control in regulation; c. (t. the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
There is more power in people			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
than people in power			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
start listening to the people			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
and scrap this			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
legislation	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from requiation"; osi and the statement of the state
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be the voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online adjointhms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unamoglousys, so we onn tose access to ness services.  A Lastly, I ure thinking in direction to exsure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Theresa	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
meresa		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks propect to onlines expression, I am satisfy out to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			d. Implementing uscoveracinity provisions in a way due imministrate the react or unter-advining s. b. Evaculding solar media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no managery for the property of the control of the co
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Theresa	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ithe] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Theresa	Р.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and treier torset from reoutaintor".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutary and optional to users like me, and any CRC-directed changes to how online adjointhms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Theresa	D.	British Columbia	1 das you mil take inj nestidak ind consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Theresa	М.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exacuting social metals uses and return with regulation; and the control of the state of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Therese	Z.	Alberta	As a concerned opera in Chanda I am submitting my commonts on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Reportanting Developers in Chanda I am submitting my commonts on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Reportanting Developers in Chanda I am submitting my commonts on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Reportanting Developers in Chanda I am submitting my commonts on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Reportanting Developers in Chanda I am submitting my commonts on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Reportanting Developers in Chanda I am submitting my commonts on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Reportanting Developers in Chanda I am submitted Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Reportanting Developers in Chanda I am submitted Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Reportanting Developers in Chanda I am submitted Directions in Cotton Direction Directi
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Thomas	C.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Thomas	N.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Thomas	E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. 'Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. 'excluding social media users and creators and helier content from regulation";  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Thomas	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalistion".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Thomas	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Thomas	K	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Thomas	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Thomas	R.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and und the CNC is directed on (f) respect adulence clock and, where pussible, increase use options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Thomas	В.	Manitoba	My main concern with this bill is that it is written in a way that can too easily control the free speech of the Citizens of canada. The government should have no say over what should be considered canadian content and this antiquated idea that the
Thomas	C.	British Columbia	government knows what's good for citizens has been proven wrong over and over and over again. We are not your children, you are our civil servants. I don't want you in my business and neither does anyone else. We pay taxes and expect some semblance of representation from people we choose to give way too much power to, power that has been abused over and over. Do not try and censor the internet, we can do that for ourselves. A better use of your time and our money would be to fix things that need fixing. Roads, Healthcare, getting corruption out of your place of work, do SOMETHING useful and that benefits the average canadain. Unless of course the "Average canadian" is just a talking point you love to use in your speeches.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
		British	1. Firstly, I believe that Bill C-11 is sincerely not in all Canadians best interest and needs to be dropped and eliminated immediately  Thank you
Thomas	L.	Columbia	Thomas Lessing P.Eng. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "exclud
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Thomas M	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understangs"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed by (c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tiana	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: 2. *Implamentage discoverability my various is not in the third in the strong strong the strong stro
			c. [ute] Unit C. Silvected to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Tiffany	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tiffany	V.	Alberta

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and while crotnent from repulation".
			D. exculaing social media users and creators and meir content from regulation;     (E [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tiffany	v.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
TIK	т.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing social metal users and treators and uner content norm regulation;  C [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no mile undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the ] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	P.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. exclusing social medical bases and useful control and used control and
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from the conte
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discureability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding osici media users and creators and their content from regulation", since the content of th
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed and rot to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audionece choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
TIM	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from requilation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. excluding Social microid sets and underside in the regulation in c. (t.le) "CRTC indirected not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	Q.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I widuou fixe or expliess my storing support for the rollowing gluorante in the policy unection; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	F.	n

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. "excluding social media users and their content from regulation;"  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to (°C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options and adaptive.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	М.	Alberta	The below note is a pre-written note, which I do fully agree with. However, I'd like to also say that I'm beyond sick of the bumbling and incompetent handling of the country as performed by the trudeau government. We are strongly considering leaving the country due to the incomprehensibly short-sighted, ideological decisions made by the federal government since 2015, and the abhorrent damage inflicted on our economy, even prior to covid.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose requistory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. The concentral that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks chiving small and notice foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tim	Р.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft colicy direction's efforts to address the risks
Tim	Р.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
Tim	Р.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support pouldance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation."
Tim	Р.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
Tim	P.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Tim	Р.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy: respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online aligorithms work should let the to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which serving on which servings should be refused, and risks chrining small and niche foreign services out of Canadia. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Tim	P.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Tim	P.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementable discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementable discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'to' (prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction in these outputs and optional to users like me, and any CRTC directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choices whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Tim	Р.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support greation:  a. 'Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation';  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation';  c. (the) 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from remease the options available.'  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should tell me chose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
Tim	P.	Nova Scotia Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In concerned to the control of the policy direction in expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction is the surface of the policy direction is direction to express the policy of and algorithm work should be repulsated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  A lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Stop protecting
	P		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementation discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings."; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation regulation of the content from regulation of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion oppor
	P		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) [*CRTC is directed to timpose regulatory requirements on notine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Stop protecting companies that outsource jobs to che
	P.		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In concerned the CRTC is directed in to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; b. "In concerned that the policy direction in consideration of consideration of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction and advanced that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of onli
	P.		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation" b. "activating social media users and creators and their content from regulation" b. "activating social media users and creators and their content from regulation" b. "activating social media users and creators and their content from regulation" b. "activating social media users and creators and their content from regulation" b. "activating social media users and creators and their content from regulation" b. "activating social media users and creators and cre
	P.		It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy: respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online aligorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. To protecting companies that outsource jobs to cheaper off shore locations. If there being protected then they should provid
	P.		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] *CRTC is directed to TCJ (respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the volundary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the volundary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the volundary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the volundary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the volundary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the volundary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the volundary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the volundary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the volundary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the volundary and promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choses to c
	P.		It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy: respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Stop protecting companies that outsource jobs to cheaper off shore locations. If there being protected then they should provide
	P.		It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"; a. "In the strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, his crucial that the final version of the policy direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Billi C-11's imple
	P.		It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, Iwould like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restores and their content from regulatoria/riggs in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (Iring) CRTC is directed to "Cit of sincetals to "Cit of person creators and their content from regulatoria/riggs in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (Iring) CRTC is directed to "Cit of special cultification colorise and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be time choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm oncemed that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lasty, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no mat
	P.		It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  In Firstly, I would like to express my from support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  a. "In the first in feedback into consideration, and the first of the control of t
Tim		Ontario	It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my reng support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  2. "Inspirementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  2. (the!) CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social model creators;  3. In the control of the control of the control of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. The concerned that the policy direction lack catry on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, and unambiguously, so we don't be inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators.  3. The promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, and unambiguously, so we don't be required to the control of the current of the promotion opportunities cre
Tim		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks powed to online expression, I am adding you to solidily and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Friety, I would like the expression yet sorting support for the following quidance in the policy direction:  I Friety, I would like the expression of the policy direction of the policy direction of the control of the policy direction of the po
Tim		Ontario	It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  In Fristly, I round like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Inspiranting discoverability provisions in a way that riminizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings."  a. "In the provision of the policy direction in the policy direction of the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction is best cases to these services.  4. Lastly, Turge that the policy direction is best cases to these services.  4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Stop protecting companies that outsource jobs to chapper off shore locations. If there being protected then they should provide good paying jobs to Canadians.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate t
Tim		Ontario	It rout you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Grands, I am admitting my comments on the Order Izaning Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks good to chimse response, I am analysis you to study's year demands the later of the policy direction.  1. Frest, 1, Two did the the expense my group appoint for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Frest, 2, Two did the the expense my group appoint for the following policions are the policy direction.  1. Frest, 2, Two did the the expense my group appoint for the following policions are the policy direction of the policy direction in a way that minimizes the needs to all the group of the policy direction of the policy direction in a way that minimizes the needs to all the policy direction in a way that minimizes the needs to all the policy direction in the policy direction of the policy direction in the policy direction of the policy direction in the policy dire
Tim		Ontario	As a concerned parent in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks protected to risk may be expensed. I am safety to to solidy and enhances the expensed may be a considered and expensed in a set of the minimum of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks are increased as a set of the minimum of the content from regulatory.  1. Firstly, I mould like to express my strong support for the following guidance on the policy direction is an advantage of the content from regulatory.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC direction disagnets the own clinical entirely and provided in the content of the policy direction is less clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  3. The concerned parts the policy of precions less to drive you which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they drooped to consider a direction to ensure far and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by BIII C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they drooped to consider any office of content.  3. Firstly, 1 mould like to expre
Tim		Ontario	It routs you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned paren in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order fassing Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Ragulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properties from the content form regulatory.  I Firstly, I model like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction is an expression of the content form regulatory.  I Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction is and that the CPTC (sincertain lof) content of the content form regulatory.  I Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction in an expression of the policy direction in a content of the content of th
Tim		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order fassing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks person of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properties for the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks and the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is a direction or content from regulatory.  1. Firstly, 1. would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction is and that the CRTC (single fassion fassion) and the content from a direction and the content from regulatory.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction is accorded by a commitment to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction in accorded to surse the merit and any CRTC directed changes to be no emitted elapse that we will express the policy and appreciate the policy direction in the final version of the policy direction in the policy direction in the final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, on we don't be accoss to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urgs the inclusion of a direction to ensure fire and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no mixture when the policy direction to ensure fire and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no mixture when the policy direction to ensure fire and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no mixture when the policy of the color to ensure.  2. The policy of the color of content.  2. The policy of the
Tim		Ontario	As a concerned person in Careada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the rolds produced to make segressor, I am sading voice bodders and enhance these commitments in the policy direction:  I. Firstly, I. enough like to express my strong support for the following guidence in the policy direction:  I. Firstly, I. enough like to express my strong support for the following guidence in the policy direction:  I. and in that the CRTC is deviced to "Cl opportung direction and the control of the policy direction and an advantage of the policy direction and an advantage of the policy of the policy of precision and an advantage of the policy of the policy of precision and an advantage of the policy of the policy of precision and advantage of the policy of precision and adv

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Timothy	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online interlatings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Timothy	w.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. Insty; I mode like to express my surgious support to the renorming detailed in the planty distriction.  3. Implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  (; the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation";  (; the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation";  (; the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation";  (; the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation";  (; the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To currier strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Timothy	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rimothy	C.	Coldinoid	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (E. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tina	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Joseph O Willie Expression, Fair asking your solution and research with the resolution of the following guidance in the play direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIS directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			and the where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tina	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. textuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. d
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tina	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Joseu to dimine expression, I am assuing you distinuly enter minimize these commitments in the limit resistin.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the play direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tina	v	British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tina	к.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tina	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			In the final version, please solidify and enhance the commitments to address the risks posed to online expression.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tina	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. "Ethe" YCRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tino	В.	Ontario	There are already laws I place. We don't need your big brother tactics to create a totalitarian society. Trudeau needs to resign.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tjerk	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concented person in Calculus, I am submitting intry comments or the Order Issuing intervious to the Circle Issuing Is
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from reoutation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Toba	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (I the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To druther strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to be a content should be used to be used to be used.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Toby	D.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
· OUY

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			Doesd to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final vestion.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Toby		Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
TODY	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "Cy (expects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Todd	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Todd	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from place in the content from the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Todd	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Excluding solid inequal bases and useful contine it from regulation ;  (E) the "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Todd	0.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "Rextuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Todd	F.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the KCRT is directed to "(c) respect suddence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Todd	В.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Todd	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Also, telling corporations to pay to provide news to the Canadian government is ridiculous. It is no wonder that those corporations have chosen to not provide news content, because of C-11.
L			Also, telling corporations to pay to provide news to the Calibration government is mulculous. It is no worker that those corporations have those to not provide news contently occurs or C-11.
Todd	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing uscreaming provisions in a very dust imminizes time net or to after algorithms to inductioning in the provision of the content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRTC is directed in to impose regulation requirements on online understands in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			Promoting Canadian content is fine, but ultimately is should be up to the end user is they want the Canadian content, not forced.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Todd	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. and that the KRTL is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Todd	H.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Toli	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "I way that the provisions in a way that minimizes that need to after algorithms of the provisions in a way to a second the provisions of the provisions
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Tom	w.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tom	S.	Ontario	Lubs, you mill done my recursor. Into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "exulution social media users and preators and help content from regulation".
			c. Exhaulting social means and real content from Egundon."  C. The j "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tom	м.	Manitoba	As a paperand page in Canada I am submitting my commonts on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Regardanting Densilator, Grammond). While I appropriate the draft policy directions of first to address the piles.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tom	R.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
tom	p.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firstly, would also comprises my, strong support for the involving guidanciack in the policy birections: 1. Firstly, would also comprises my, strong support for the involving guidanciack in the policy birections: 1. Firstly, would be comprised to the property of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
том	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tommi	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tommy	C.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			It is not certain that the policy uneccon lacks carry or minute sevices should be regulated, and task alwing small and incher overgine excess to the calculate. The minute certain that the policy includes the policy of the control of the calculate of the ca
			matter where they choose to create.
Tommy	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			D. exclusing social meals users and creators and their content from regulation;  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
toni	s.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			b. Excluding social mental basis and treative and their content from regulation;  C [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Toni	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Toni	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tonja	E.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tony	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Tony	c.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tony	C.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Tony	к.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tony	K.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final versor.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tony	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discureability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding osici media users and creators and their content from regulation", since the content of th
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it kie me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms away whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			uneninguously, so we out note access to universe envices.  Al. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tony	d.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed ton-limiting expression, I am an existing you to solidary due thances these commitments in the final versions in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverbaility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Toren	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracee	A.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not ("O") respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Tracey	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracey	S.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "evuluring social media users, and rearbors and their content from regulation"
			to. Exacounts seem and exact and used a
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracey	S.	Ontario
Tracey	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, it doesn't do enough for freedom of speech and goes directly against my rights as a Canadian citizen. Please halt this lift form coming infortion. It is DAMCEROUS and the gor't has no right doing this. As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and white crothert from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracey	E.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. In say, a reduct like to express any sucing support for the innoving glusted in the point, but excluding .  3. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that milimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [ the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  [ the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I have an online business where I work virtually with clients to help them live with less stress and enjoy their life more. I don't believe it's fair for creators to be censored. My online business is providing a lot of good to the world.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracey	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
T	E.	0	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracy	-	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			1. A Lastby, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracy	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understainings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and whele content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy lespecta undernoe choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracy	J.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and helfer content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'to'; respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracy	В.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracy	М.	Ontario
Tracy	В.	Ontario	Quit trying to censor the people you work for. Are you planning to do something bad to Canadians that you don't want people to know about? Stop violating Canadians rights.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tracy	W.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media ucreators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where socialishie, increase the oothoors available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Tracy	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
iracy	Б.	Coldilibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Tracy		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
indey		Coldinoid	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     in the content of the content from the provision of the content from the content fro
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chew there to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Travis	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Travis	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; d. and that the RCTC is directed or 'Or lessecte audience choice and where possible; increase the options available".
			2. To further strendthen these commitments to individual choice and expression. It is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Travis	P.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Treena	В.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am anximity out to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on notine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Trevor	W.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CXTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CXTC is directed to ("Cy' espect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  d. d
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Frevor	w.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect, adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1/m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.    Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Frevor	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I aming upon unitarity on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pose to conline expression, I am and story out to solidary and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no material products of the contract of the cont
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Frevor	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Trevor	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Does do continue expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "It is the control of the contro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Trevor	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
-

			As a concentral page in Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CDTC (Sustainable and Escalable Development Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CDTC (Sustainable and Escalable Development Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CDTC (Sustainable and Escalable Development Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CDTC (Sustainable and Escalable Development Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CDTC (Sustainable and Escalable Development Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CDTC (Sustainable Development Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CDTC (Sustainable Development Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CDTC (Sustainable Development Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CDTC (Sustainable Development Canada Law submitted Canada Law submit
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. exclusing social metal users and users and user content from regulation; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Trevor	К.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned access in Canada I are submitting mus comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CPTC (Surtingly) and Equiphly Broadcasting Doublabou Example (All Mills I appropriate the draft policy directions's offert to address the sixty.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in a "implementing discoverability or "implementing discoverability or "implementing discoverability" or "implementing disco
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Trevor	K.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRIT's directed to "follower books" or several regulations are several regulations and their several regulations are several regulations and their several regulations are several regulations and their several regulations are several regulations are several regulations and their several regulations are several regulations are several regulations.  A continuous several regulations are several regulations are several regulations. The regulations are several regulations are several regulations are several regulations. The regulations are several regulations are several regulations are several regulations.  B. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations."  A continuous regulations are several regulations. The regulations are several regulations are several regulations are several regulations. The regulations are several regulations are several regulations. The regulations are several regulations are several regulations. The regulations are several regulations are several regulations are several regulations. The regulations are several regulations are several regulations. The regulations are several regulations are several regulations are several regulations. The regulations are several regulatio
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Trevor	М.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of Proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adultione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Trevor	L.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Trevor	w.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Trevor	J.	British Columbia	As a concerned Canadian, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[C] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I upe the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Trevor	Α.	Ontario

I know these consultations net a great deal of cookie-cutter feedback, and while I urge you to pay heed to the contents of that feedback, I have concerns that aren't directly addressed in the organized fee... The topic of my concern is stochastic terrorism. The definition of stochastic terrorism I will use for this comment is "the use of words, images, video, audio, or related media to elicit fear and/or disgust in others with an end goal of inciting others to violence." Or, more succincity: living to people to get them mad enough to vote and act against their own best interests, and in extreme enough iterations to commit violence. As a society we have chosen not to act against stochastic terrorism out of the legitimate fear that any laws or regulations which clam down on stochastic terrorism would also have a chilling effect on progressive movements which aim to increase the quality of life for all. Unfortunately, this argument has been proven to be fallacious. While it is true that in practice governments and law enforcement agencies preferentially prosecute - and persecutel - progressive individuals and organizations, refraining from regulating stochastic terrorism has done nothing to limit the rise of a dangerous and violent regressive movement within our nation. Or, again to be more succinct: we've allowed US-style free-speech maximalism to prevent us from clamping down on people who bilatantly lie in order to whip the populace into a frenzy of hate, and that result/hashs toworked out for us very well as a society. I submit that the geographic origin of an idea - or the media which conveys it - is not nearly so important to the health of our society as the *purpose* and the *truthfulness* of that idea and/or media. This leads me to The Question(TM). This is the only question that actually matters, and it is one that I would very much like everyone who reads this to ask themselves in the role of human beings. Put aside for just a moment your rank, title, personal wealth, and especially your personal ambitions. Reflecting upon your deepest personal beliefs, upon the empathy you feel (if any) for others, and upon the world you wish to leave for those who come after us, I beg of you, as one human being to another, to ask and answer this question: What are the fundamental values of the nation you wish to build, and to hand to the future? Do you want to leave the future a nation where all but the wealthiest in our society need to struggle every day just to survive? Do you want a nation of hatred and bigotry where significant portions of our society lash out at anyone who is different, and where those who cannot or will not conform to arbitrary social standards are ostracized, starved, beaten, and even murdered? Do you want to leave the future a nation where greed is championed as the primary virtue of our society while empathy is shunned as the most deplorable of emotions? Do you want a future where environmental and ecological disasters are ignored - or even felibraterial variesizated? If you want the outcomes listed above then focus on the geographic origin of ideas and the media that conveys them instead of the veracity of what is presented. We have all lived through the proof that constantly lying to people can and does lead to the outcomes! a sleeked about above. When there are no consequences for stochastic terrorism it will be - it IS being - practiced liberally and to detriment of us all. We don't need to clamp down on what people from other nations are saying in our social media. But we do need to mandate minimum levels of hate speech moderation, bot farms, and above all deliberate prevarication in "formal" media with an end goal of furthering stochastic terrorism. In conclusion, I would again like to ask everyone involved the only question that truly matters: What are the fundamental values of the nation you wish to build, and to hand to the future? Because this rulemaking decision is one of the efforts that will definitively determine what that future will be.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 c. (the) "CNTC is directed to Troit or the content from their content from the properties of programs of social media creators";
 d. and that the CNTC is directed to (C) respect audionise choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. British Columbia Ifind C-11 repugnant to everything that Canada stands for and it is the product of foreign ideology, and needs to be abolished!
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. Impelienting discoverability provisions in a wey dust imminizes the need to elect approximation to discousing uncertainty; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation?
c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy ("respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canamater where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "immlementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way rular imminizes une regulation."
b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation."
c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lack didn't on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and undertakings of the properties of the properties and the properties of the properties o 4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where their choices in created. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 C. [the] "CKTC is directed to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators",
 d. and that the CKTC is directed to "[C] respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available". further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should untary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks and proposed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 Evacluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 C. (the) "CNTC is directed to Too impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
 d. and that the CNTC is directed to (C) respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any me be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, nor matter where they choose to created.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			- (A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Trina	T.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restors and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC 5 directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on nonline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Trish	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "availability and it is a contact may be the contact from a provision of the contact from the cont
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Trish	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adultinence robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tristan	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tristan	Υ.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation from regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC 5 directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Tristan	Р.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". C. [the] "CRT [5] directed not to impose regulation "requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Tristin	т.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
· · iouii		Countible	Brilliant your flatulent, brain numb program "creators" at the CRTC have used 1970's solutions for 2030 internet problems. Way to go Boomer. You stuffed this one. You have, in your bureaucratic arrogance conjugated (with a collossal poverty of institutional imagination) a dead zone in internet traffic for Canadian creators. Most will relocate their base to free speech zones outside this frozen pink plantation, and Canada will continue to be the laughing stock in the rest of the creative world. You have turned Canada into North Korea with mapping styrup flavouring.
		British	I trust you will completely ignore my feedback as you typically do with these stallnist Ottawa centric fantasies.
Tristin	T.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on noine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Troy	Υ.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. The property of the propert
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Troy	F.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [Line] CRILE distributed is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
_		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Troy	G.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a later algorithms of broadcasting undertained; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users are considered from the content of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no inster where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Troy	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Troy	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
/	1		Hey CRTC,
			The boilerplate follows, but I wanted to be sure to point out this isn't just another blind-click petition. Please respect the following points.  Troy.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and restarts and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Troy	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to reflect purposers on I. I.m. selsion with regulation and explanation of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to reflect the regular purposers. I am selsion with regulation and advanced to reflect the regular purposers of the regular purposers of the regular purposers of the regular purposers.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Twyla	D.	Ontario

			A second data of Court Law and State of Court Law and Cour
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be volutary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	G.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A Lastly, I upe the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	т.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed (°) (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Tyler	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter alloyardness of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urgs the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Tyler	4	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	Α.	Untario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei "CRT's directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
L.			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	V.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implemental discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	T.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "Carl Carl Carl Carl Carl Carl Carl Carl
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to include choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	В.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. In any 1, whou have copiess my stong support on the following subsection in the pointy function.  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. Ithe "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Tyler	G.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soolal media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Ciry respect audique choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	E.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I is in my opinion that any bill or leoislation should be aimed at the following:
			1. Promoting Canadian content without interfering with individual choices and preferences. 2. In some way, without interfering with freedom of expression and protecting the integrity of content creators and distributers, a means of flagging information that is erroneous and by such nature harmful. 3. Protecting the economic stability of content creators
			A. Being clear and concise to prevent Toop holes' that could be used to exercise authority beyond the intended scope of the bill or legislation.  and the points 2 and 4 that were provided in this template as follows;
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	v.	Nova Scotia New
Tyler	G.	Brunswick	I am an adult I do not need a bunch of clowns trying to fix things that are not broken, screw the wef, agenda 2030 and your nonsense.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTIC (sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of Proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adultione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyler	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CNTC is directed to impose regulatory requirements on online undertines on continue undersized in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CNTC is directed to (C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availabile".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Tyler	Α.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			V Control of the Cont
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyrone	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tyrone	w.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ulla	k.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience orbice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks danity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ulrich	S.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation from regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To current of the control to the
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ulrich	F.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. Lasty, target the includes for a discussion of situation of entire fail and equal treatment of an Canadian distinct of profitorior opportunities desired by bits C-113 imperientation made be equally available to an Canadian distinct clearurs, for matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ursula	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Henry?	l,	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Insty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"mplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ursula	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. If m concent that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ursula	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the   "CRIC" is directed not to impose reculatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. [me] UNLL is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online uncertainings in respect or programs or social media creators; d. and that the CRIC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Urszula	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Orszula		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ute	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
v	T.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a worth that minimizes the need to alter be need to alter adjointmin of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTC is directed by CXT respect adjusted provided in the content of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and spression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
V	т.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [, thei \"CRIT's directed not impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			to find the CRC is directed including sequency requirements or online uncertainties in respect or programs of social metal directors; d. and that the CRC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available?  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	D.	Albanta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a second course in Court I are submitted as a second court in the Court I are the Court I a
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restors and their content form equalition".
			b. exclusing social metals uses and creators and the control a
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Val	R.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators." d. "excluding social media users
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Valerie	S.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Valerie	F.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTLs directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTL is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Valerie	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Implementing discoverability of the support of the provisions of the support of the sup
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			L satyl, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Valerie	R.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambiguously. so we don't lose across to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vanessa	Н.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vanessa	T.	British Columbia

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding Social medical bases and sections and reliable intervals and reliable interval
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vanessa	w.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
vanessa	r.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Varindrapal	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. Comming from a communist country it is concerning for me to see a free country employing the same comunists tactics regarding the fredom of speach and the right to chose.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vasile	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Velvet	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to drimle expression; and asking you discinding the interior the following guidance in the milk version:  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To concern that the notice direction hards and expression, it is ductat that the mile version to the policy direction to use going version the advantage and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the noticy direction lacks fairly on which services should be me choose whether to make use of them.
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Marita	u	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Verity	н.	JiitailU	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Verlie J	J.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			b. Excluding Social metals also also also also also also also a
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vern	w.	Manitoba	As a concerned across in Canada I are submitting must comment on the Order Issuing Directions to the CPTC (Surtingly) and Equiphly Broadesting Doubleton Example (All I are submitted as a first to address the sixty.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable to the second
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Verna	N.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Verna	L.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. I also trust that you will allow me to make my own decisions on what content I watch, read, listen to &/or share. I do not need you to make that decision for me.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vernice	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vernnal	L.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CKIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Vernon	S.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vernon	T.	Saskatchewa n

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearbox and their content form penulation".
			b. exclusing solar intensit users and Letter from regulator in the result of the control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
VERONIKA	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. Ithel "CNTC" is directed to rol (or respect audionizes choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "CI respect audionizes choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. d. and that the CRTC is directed to "CI respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. d. and that the CRTC is directed to "CI respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. "The control of the control of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vicki	s.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a dater algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Vicki	w.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Q' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
VICTOR	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Victor	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Victor	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Victor	L.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Victoria	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Victoria	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS idertected not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Victoria	Р.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
VICTORIA		Coldinoid	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Viktor	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vinicius	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the! "CRIC 15 directed not to impose regulator venuirements on noine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Violet	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Violet	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reaulation".
			D. exculuing social mena users and creators and melr content from regulation',     ([the] "CRCT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Virginia	T.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from reaulation".</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Virginia	н.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Virginia	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Vita	z.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vital	м.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a let policy directurity.  b. "excluding social media users and creators and which content from regulation".  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'to', respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vitus	Y.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to 'to' (cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			1. Usust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		British	Livus, you mill take my recovers milloutisticated.

			As a constant in County Law schedules as the Order Lawine Districts to the COTE (Contribute of Cott)
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and help content from regulation".</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exclusing social menia users and creatives and unent content from regulation /  (c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vladimir	R.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the provision of the prov
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Volodymyr	G.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy' expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastiv. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Wade	z.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wade	м.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "Cy" (cry respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wakkas	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "secluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. a special media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wallis	Р.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
WALTER	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolutation".
			b. Excluding Social metad assets and useful control and user control and the c
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
walter	b.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Walter	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Walter	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and ootional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wanda	Р.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Wanda	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned Canadian, I'm saying, No. No to censorship of any content I wish to read, view, or attend. No to censorship of content from Canada or from any country in the world.
			This is the most important thing I have to tell you.  Also, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Thought method discovered by mystuding support to the influence globalistic in the plant process of process and process of the process of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wanda	N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", and the strong social media users and creators and their content from regulation and the strong social media users and creators and their content from regulation and the strong social media creators"; d. and that the KRTL is directed to "(c) respects underlines tollowed more social media creators and social media creators"; d. and that the KRTL is directed to "(c) respects underlines tollowed more social media creators and
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.1 In Contention tine: the policy officeation that set carry of minimal set rices should be regulated, and its surroung shall an incline rively) set vices out of Callada. The minimal determinant mass define a capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline rively set vices out of Callada. The minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital policy of the minimal determinant mass defined and incline capital poli
			matter where they choose to create.
Ward	E.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Warren	H.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Warren	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Warren	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
warren	Ь.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Warren	C.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Warron	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b.  Leviculing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  Leviculing social media to timpose regulation yr equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wayne	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", in the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underlangs in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KCTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wayne	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "sevulution sortal media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to exclusing social media users an in creators and unter control regulation;     (Ethe) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wayne	S.	Alberta

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wayne	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation yr equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Wayne	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Wayne	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
wayne	f.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			ia. "Implementing discoverbillity provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wayne	Α.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from receives the content of the content of their conten
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Prince Edward	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wayne	В.	Island	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. That the CRTC is directed to " respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wayne	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			pose to drime expression, I am assing you destinate refreshmented resection movements in the limit version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the play direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in awy that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
wayne	h.	Ontario

			The second state of the second
			I am a senior with eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.  You have already been warned to keep your hands off the internet. It is my sincere wish that the Liberal Party of Canada be wiped out in the next election, never to be seen again in this country and it is also desired that criminal charges be brought against Trudeau, Freeland and the meabling Jagmeet Singh for treason. The public is beginning to wake up and we are no longer prepared to passively tolerate totalitarian abuse in this country. Ignore the public moving forward and you may want to practice the phrase, "Do you want fries with that?" Secure our borders, deliver the mail and get out of our lives or we will deal the federal government out of our lives.
			Listen to the young people. Utilise older Canadians such as myself, the young people are not particularly patient or forgiving. They are not going tolerate the interference in their communications for much longer and those kids are not particularly patient with the enabling bureaucrast either. Ignore from a senior at your government's own peril.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
Wayne	C.	Saskatchewa	matter where they choose to create.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and undertakings to the only to see a concerned to the properties.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wayne	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition";
			b. exclusing social media users and creators and meir content from regulation (r. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";      d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. I would like to see this bill completely tossed out.
Weldon	s.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			In addition to the attached information I agree with. You are an Orwell deep state, sabanic, sodomist cult showing your Virgannical phsyop of propaganda cowl death shots and fake plandemics down our throats and killing us with remdisivir and fake climates change, You will answer to God for your depopulation agends when you stand before him in all His wavesome glory with Jesus and the Hofy angels at the judgement day. In the name of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ may you spend an eternity in hell with your friend Satan and all of his transvestite covid buddies!  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Weldon	F.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Weldoll		Coldinola	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pose to conline expression, I am anxising you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (t.) the CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wendy	м.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and rearbors and their content from requisition".
			b. exclusing social media users and creators and meir content from regulation;     c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mond:	т	Onterio	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wendy	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. Ithel "CRIC is directed not to imose regulator prougrements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wendy	w.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and help content from regulation".</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. excounting social menia users and creators and user content front regulation /     c. (the) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";      d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wendy	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Texcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. Texcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "Cy lerspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wendy	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "seculating social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "seculating social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to "c) ("respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to "c) ("respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Wendy	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a limplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of brandcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wendy	т.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "Cy ("cy respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wendy	N.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the provision of the prov
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
wendy	k.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "seculating social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "seculating social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to "(c)" (express tauledirect choice and, where possible, in crease the options available"; expression of the content of the con
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wendy	Α.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Werner	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4.1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. In my thinking, quality, interesting content from any content creator, Canadian or otherwise, will be viewed and shared by individuals who can see and understand that quality, thereby promoting that content. I emphasize that the quality and interesting content must be there in the first place. Forcing poor content to the forefront of searches (for example) will only do Canadians a disservice.
			Edgy content must be allowed to raise questions and promote discussion from viewers. Freedom of speech must be mandatory.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wes	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatiory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wesley	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatiory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wesley	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Will	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to dimine expression, I am asking you do soming and eminance uses communication in many version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the roll of the properties of the proper
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the   "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Will	V	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
AAIII	K.	JIILAFIO	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose requisionry requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Will	H.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Property of the property of				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Part				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
A control of Control o				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
For address to the control of the co				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Harmonia and the second control of the secon				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Service And Control Co				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Services of the control of the contr
A Service of the serv	MGU	D.	Albanta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
A service recognition of the company	vviii	Б.	Albeita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Part   Comment				1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
Part				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Service of the company of the compan				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
4. Language of the second seco				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Learning Communication Control				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
The Court of the C
to the content of the	Will	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned nerson in Canada. I am submittion my comments on the Order Issuino Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Equitable Renderation Regulatory Framework). While I appropriate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Institute control descriptions for some of the monotone in any of an employed processors of the processor of the sound of the processor o				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
d. et all of the CFC in developing the commitment on the process and approximate control of the process of the				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".
he window and optional to use the man, and an CHI-Chicago displayed in the confidence of the chicago designed and providence of the confidence of the chicago designed and providence of the chicago designed and pro				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Langer of the maintenance of a common formation and provided or provided and provid				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
The state of the control of the cont				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Abstract  A set outpool including management in the processing or Canada, 2 and a company including to the printing or canadamy or for the part of the printing or canadamy or				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As an engaged introduct an extended in Casaba. It am provided for the formation of the chart favoring processor to the CTC (statistantible and favoring processor). While I administration of the chart provided in the char				I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I also file to be begin by efficiency or summer or protection of the to begin by efficiency or produces on any or protection of the control	will	a.	Alberta	As an engaged individual residing in Canada, I am providing my feedback on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I acknowledge the initial endeavors of the draft policy
D. The exclusion discuss relative contains, and influencement of from requiring responses related by exact made creature.  d. The discussion of social made serves, counting, with other contents of the property of the response of the respo				1.I would like to begin by affirming my unwavering endorsement for the following provisions outlined in the policy direction:
2. In order to forty the experimentation to incidend droce and experiments to incidend droce and experiments to incidend droce and experiments of experiments of the policy deviction in experiments of e				b. The exclusion of social media users, creators, and their content from regulatory measures.  C. The clear instruction for the CRTC not to impose requilatory requirements on online undertakings concerning programs created by social media creators.
should be valuedary and decorbinary for uses, what an arrowall, definitionally, any electronic induced by the CRIT operations to not the government and the employer, cold or many and of decorbinate from contacts. It is successed to employ the control of the price of the employer cold or many and of expectated foreign services from Canada, It is not excessed in the designation of the employer, cold or many and and expectated foreign services from Canada, It is not excessed in the designation of the employer, cold or many and the employer of the employer, cold or many and the employer of the employer, cold or many and the employer of the employer of the employer, cold or many and the employer of				2.In order to fortify these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is vital that the final iteration of the policy direction unequivocally excludes any form of blanket algorithm alteration. Any initiatives aimed at promoting Canadian content is imperative that the facilitation distinct, and unsquiredisting distincts and unsquiredisting distincts are proposed for a proposed of the proposed of control in the displacement of small and specialized foreign services from Canada. It is imperative to all of control in the displacement of small and specialized foreign services from Canada. It is imperative to all of control in the displacement of small and specialized foreign services from Canada. It is imperative to all of control in the displacement of small and specialized foreign services from Canada. It is imperative to all of control in the displacement of small and specialized foreign services from Canada. It is important to all of control in the displacement of small and specialized foreign services from Canada. It is control in the control in				should be voluntary and discretionary for users, such as myself. Additionally, any alterations directed by the CRTC pertaining to online algorithms should provide me with the freedom to decide whether to adopt them.
is importable that the final direction distinctly and uniquinvarially definite the appropriate scope of online undertailings of provided any loss of access to these valuable services.    Substitute				is imperative that the final direction distinctly and unequivocally defines the appropriate scope of online undertakings to prevent any loss of access to these valuable services.
accessible to all Condain online creations, regardless of their change platform or plate of proteonics. Equality of opportunity should be a fundamental principle guiding these previous.  Here are concerned previous the consideration of the control of the contro				is imperative that the final direction distinctly and unequivocally defines the appropriate scope of online undertakings to prevent any loss of access to these valuable services.
As a concerned person in Crassés, 2 im a substitute of my comments on the Order Exacus Directions to the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks policy for center of the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks policy and the control of the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction in control of the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction risks and control of the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction risks and provided the control of the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction risks and provided the control of the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction risks and and an according to the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction risks and an according to the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction risks and the CTTC and the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is effort to address the risks power of the CTTC (Sestamable and Equilable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is effort to address the risks power is a control of the CTTC and the contr				accessible to all Canadian online creators, regardless of their chosen platform or place of creation. Equality of opportunity should be a fundamental principle guiding these provisions.
1. Firstly, 1 and did lie to express my drong support for the following guidence in the gallyst devention:  a. Implementing disconnessing promotions in a system chimities the need to glare deportment on a common of the profession of the professio	Will	J.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
a. "Implementally decourability provisions in a say that manifest being deportment of broadcasting of programs of scoil media crastors"; c. Itels ("CRIC is directed to this prospersation) and undertakings in respect of programs of scoil media crastors"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(") respect adeleted only and include the propersation of the policy direction in rules out drawns and an adeleted to the contract of the propersation of the policy direction is created by the contract of the propersation of the policy direction is created by the contract of the propersation of the policy direction is created by the contract of the propersation of the policy direction is created by the contract of the propersation of the policy direction is created by the contract of the policy direction is created by the contract of the propersation of the policy direction is created by the contract of the propersation of the policy direction is created by the contract of the propersation of the propersat
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to an individual boke one appreciancy, it is crued that the final version of the policy derection rules out across-the-board algorithm entirely. Any measures aimed all promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the poly direction loss carby on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small an incident freign services out of canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, 1 urge the incidence in the poly direction loss carby on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small an incident properties on the CRTC is directed to "CIV" to will be any methods. Incidence of consideration, and the services of the CRTC is directed to "CIV" to will be any methods. Incidence of the creation of the cRTC is directed to "CIV" to will be any methods. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posted to certain expression, I am asking you to acidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to requirement with committee the respect of programs of social media creations,"  2. To Certain Service of the CRTC is directed on Improve regulations on online undertakings in expression of the policy direction is a cross-the-board algorithm skeration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to break algorithms work should let me choose whether				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolution".
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-Grinced changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. In monament that the policy direction facts carried to ensure far and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unamahiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the industion of a direction to neutra far and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  8. Aberta  8. Aberta  8. A accordered person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equalable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expressor, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I mould like the express my strong support for the following durines in the policy directions:  2. Firstly, I mould like the express my strong support for the following durines in the policy directions on a "implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to aller algorithms of breaddesides undertakings";  3. In concerned that the Equilibrium of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equalable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks would be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC effected damages to how online algorithms work validation.  2. To further stronglether these commitments in its individual chine and expression, its convolute and expression is to convolute algorithms where the board algorithm alteration must be equally available to all Canadian online creators,				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
A lasty, furge the inclusion of a direction to ensure far and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.    I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. As the bill itself is helfer dust.				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. As the bill itself is helfer dust.  Alberta  Al				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Aberta  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of prodeasting undertakings"; b. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across—the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC indirected changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I is crucial that the final version between the choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm oncemed that the policy direction lasks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose accesses to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they cloose to creake.  Willaby  C. Ortario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed t
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to aller adjorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Yexcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation, d. and that the CRTC is directed to I/C (Prepetct addinance choice and, where possible, increase the possible, increase the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-C-directed changes to be on online algorithms work should for the choice whicher to make use of them.  3. Tim concremed that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and nich for region services out of Canada, The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unminipousubly, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these	MAGII			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. As the bill itself is heifer dust.
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and crastors and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users." c. [the] "CKTC is directed in the CKTC is directed to "(c) respect addinger choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms mork should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Irrust, you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, it is used to receive the meet to alter alterious or intensity and policional provisions in an asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. I'ristly, I would like to express my strong	Will	ь.	Albeita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect undience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how dispositions work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Willaby  C. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directions in the policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments to a way that minimizings the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. "excluding so				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks carrives should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Willaby  C. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  a. "Implementation must define the appropriate stope of online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators."  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulations the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings."  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation."  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not in impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators."  d. and that the CRTC is directed not individual choice and expression, it aversion of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", expert of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Willaby  C. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulations to online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators",  d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators."  d. and that the CRTC is directed not individual choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is useful that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chane				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementation media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments to in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizings the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting undertakings)";  c. (the) "CRTC is directed to in the policy direction in dividual choice and expression, it is directed to include the final version.  3. I'm concer				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Willaby  C. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Charles of the CRTC is directed to "(or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks callry to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.				4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking vou to solidify and enhance these commitments to in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizing the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (Ithe] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not individual choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it availables to individual choice and expression, it along that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally ava
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the foliouring gridance in the policy direction: a. "Imperenting discoverability provisions in a very last minimizes betweeted to last algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Providing occil media success and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to to [or pessed audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC—directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Newfoundlan I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.	Willaby	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media sers and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect undertakings can disperse the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Newfoundlan I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Newfoundlan d and				<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Newfoundlan I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
unambiguously, so we don't loise access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Newfoundlan d and				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
matter where they choose to create.  Newfoundlan I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. d and d and
	William	G.		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			The state of the s
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. excluding social meta-base and useful content from regulation; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	М.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation and the content from regulation and regulation
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Prince	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William		Edward Island
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "e
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	м.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(?) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			1. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy pictor is access to these services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect to a consistent of the provisions o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators." b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators." d. "excluding social media users and creators."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	s.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sorial media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding Social medical users and Learnes and Learnes (NOTH Egulation).  C. (the) "CRT of directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	c.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
William	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
William	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
William	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understaings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KCTC is directed by (c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			natter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
william	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	0.	Ontario	a dust you mit done my required, may considerable.

			As a second control of
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	E.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media creators"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables"; d. "excluding social media creators";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	D.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online archaixings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
William	C.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
William	v.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online asking you to solidy and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
William	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
william	b.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
William		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	E.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings CLEARLY and UNAMBIGUOUSLY, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
William	S.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		While the main body of this submission appears similar to many you will likely receive. However, I am writing this introduction to demonstrate that Bill C-11 is going in the wrong direction. I am a Canadian citizen and it is up to me to decide what content I wish to view. Stop trying to tell me what to do, what to watch, what to read and what opinion to have. You have no idea what my interests are therefore are totally unqualified to regulate Online Streaming. This preamble should clearly tell you to stop Bill [-1] and leave content decisions to me and all my fellow Canadians!
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
William	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Willidill	n.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			The Canadian government needs to ensure that freedom of speach for all Canadians is protected no matter how unpopular the language and speech is. It also needs to ensure that Canadians have access to all forms of information from around the world regardless of the government's opinion of it and the opinion of the Canadian media and all sources of news and social media across the internet.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id intected not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and 3.1 in Contention that the pointy unection has desired in mind services account of mind services
			matter where they choose to create.
			5. The Canadian government needs to ensure that freedom of speach for all Canadians is protected no matter how unpopular the language and speech is. It also needs to ensure that Canadians have access to all forms of information from around the world regardless of the government's opinion of it and the opinion of the Canadian media and all sources of news and social media across the internet.
William	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			Good afternoon,  As a concerned person in Canada, small business owner & tax payer, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks ANY clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I insist the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
William	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration as I have over 30yrs of media experience & yet have seen a list of those who consulted on this Bill C-11.
·····laiii	ad a	JINGIN	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT ics directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online ackings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	D.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a woythat minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			instate where usey choose to teate.  I trust you will take my feetback into consideration.
William	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a wyth that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastiv. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Listy, Turgle the infiliation of a foreste.  Author of the properties of the prop
William	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	A.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me cave whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguouslys, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feetback into consideration.
		British	5. Freedom of speech and individual choice cannot and should not be dictated by service providers, we are not children that need to be guided in our choice of content. Public services are meant to serve us not govern our choices.
William	В.	Columbia	As a concerned Canadian, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; social media
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
William	T.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. The problementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			<ul> <li>a. exculuing social means users an oreators and metr content from regulation ,</li> <li>c. (the) "CRIS indirected not in impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
William B	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that ininimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "sevulution sorial media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on coline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and al "NCRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on coline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and al "NCRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Willie	w.	Ontario	a uses you will case my recourse into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chew whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wilma	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wilson	F.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grige the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
wolfgang	f.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wren	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wurster	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
186	D.	Ontovi	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Wyatt	ο.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a conceined person in Carlosa, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the Finder asking in the Context of Carlos and the Context of Carlos and Carlos a
			1. Firstly, I would like to express in young support for the information in the place for executive.  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that milimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "RDI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  c. [the] "RDI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Xavier	G.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a implementing discoverability provisions in a vary that minimizes the need to a literal algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Xu	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed ("C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yan	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [they"CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KCTC is directed to "(c)" espect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tall	r.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yan	В.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to notice processing. I am action you to collection and expenses the contraction of th pose to online expression, I am asking you to soliding and enhance these commitments in the Inial version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes time need to alter algoritums of oroaccasing undertakings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cr especta quidence choice and, where possible, increase the outions available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yannick	C.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Does do so film expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provision in a swy that minimes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding solal media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from requisition"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yesaya	R.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Charles I am submitting my composition to the Order I region Dispertings to the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developed Personal). While I recognize the definition of the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developed Personal).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. Exacuting social metals uses and return with regulation; and the control of the state of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grige the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yim	L.	Ontario	As a concerned opera in Chanda I am submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Formwords). While I approximate the destination of the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Formwords).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Texcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. Texcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "Cy lerspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yola	к.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastiv. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Youssif	J.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a limplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of brandcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yovan	R.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c thei] "CNE" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Yuen	J.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. Also Trudeau is ruining this country and dividing Canadians with his my way or the highway approach to politics.
Yvan	d.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rves	M.	Quebec

			As a concepted operan in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Excitable Providentian Directions to the CPTC).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft to. Exacioning social metals uses a fine teams and urten continuous regulation; (the jackTic is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helpic content from regulation".</li> </ol>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grige the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yves	N.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the provision of the pro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yves	R.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
v	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yves	ь.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yvon	F.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c] (the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [c] (the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Yvonne	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c] the] "TRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promotion Capadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Yvonne	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	Ī		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Yvonne	G.	Alberta

			Assessment of Conde Law shallking as assessment of the Conde Law State Conde
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "sevulution sortal media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and unent content from regulation /, c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
vvonne	r.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Yvonne	C.	Prince Edward Island	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
TVOITIC		Isiana	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Zabina	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zachary	т.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing social metals are an in-terms and retire content from regulation."  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zaid	f.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zain	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. This type industries or expression; so unit groups to the following glounders in the point, the section.  3. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zak	K.	Ontario

			As a constant in Constant Law publishing an appropriate to the Order Lawing Direction to the COTE (Contributed on 15 and
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			to. Excluding social metal users and return with regulation, "C. (the) "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zak	н.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media tusers and relations and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media tusers and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zana	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alteral applications of provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alteral applications; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," and the second responsibility of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ziyad	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zoe	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			ia. "Implementing discoverbillity provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooilal media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zoey	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalistion".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zoltan	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks once to notifine expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTL's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and cast of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urgs the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Zsana	т	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. It bil //CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCRTC is directed to 'c) 'c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the notions available";
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zsofia	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Concerned person in Calcada, I am asking you to soldify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  See Concerned person in Calcada, I am asking you to soldify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from explation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cr respect adulence choice and, where ossible, increase the outcoms available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. 10 future setting the confidence the confidence that changes to the confidence that changes the changes that changes the changes that changes the changes the changes the changes that changes the changes the changes the changes that changes the changes the changes the changes the changes that changes the changes the changes the changes the changes that changes the c
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zsofia	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. For further sufficient insect continues to insurance in control of the control
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			inside whee due to deate.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Zulfikar	м.	British Columbia
Zullikdi		#N/A
		#N/A #N/A
		#N/A
	:	#N/A #N/A
		#N/A #N/A
		#N/A
		#N/A #N/A
		#N/A
		#N/A #N/A
		#N/A
		#N/A #N/A
		#N/A
		#N/A #N/A
		#N/A
		#N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A
		#N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A
		#N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A
		#N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A
		#N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A
		#N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A #N/A
		# N/A
		# N/A
		# NI/A
		# NI/A
		# NI/A
		#NI/A
		#NI/A
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
	Page	# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
		# NI/A #
	Page	# NI/A #
		# NI/A #

	#N/A #N/A #N/A
	#N/A
	enia enia
	#N/A
	enia enia
	#N/A
	#N/A
	enia enia
	#N/A
	ENIA ENIA ENIA ENIA
	#N/A
	enja enja
	#N/A
	#N/A
	ENIA ENIA ENIA ENIA
	#N/A
	#N/A #N/A #N/A
	#N/A	